Union chief urges vote for Liberals

By Paul Routledge

Labour was hit by fresh internal trouble yesterday after it was disclosed that a leading trade union leader on the right of the party is advising many of his members to vote Liberal. Mr Roy Grantham, general excelary of the Association of Professional, Executive, Cleri-cal and Computer Staff, which has 123,000 members, has urged tactical voting in an article in his maion journal. He tells clerical workers in the South and West that voting for the Liberals where they have a chance of unseating the Tories

'is good sense". Mr Grantham's "vote Libcontext of a discussion about the SDP and Mrs Shirley Williams, once an APEX-sponsored Labour MP. The whitecollar mion leader writes: "What about the Alliance? I remember telling Shirley Wil-liams when she was thinking about leaving the Labour Party that the only result would be to split the vote against the Conservatives and guarantee that they retained power. She was half persuaded then.

"Today all can see that a vote for the SDP is a vote to keep in power the worst government this country has had for over a century. The Liberals are a different story. They can win a number of Conservative seats in South and West."

Mr Grantham's remarks are printed just above an advertisement in the APEX journal placed by the Labour Party, which urges: "Think positive, vote Labour". The balk of his oxide is a blanch and the printed in the positive in the printed in balk of his article is taken up with arguments to do just that "if you want a caring, economically-same Government com-mitted to a realistic defence policy, not to a jingoistic theme of massing up more and more nuclear warheads." But the Liberals are pleased that their campaign to persuade the electorate to make use of tactical voting has found an echo in such a highlyplaced Labour quarter.

Mr Paul Tyler, former Liberal MP for Bodmin in the 1974 Parliament, told The Times that mass defections of working people from Labour in Devon and Coruwall could hand the Alliance at least half of the 16 seats there.

Wave of dissent sweeps

From Christopher Walker Jerusalem

A wave of internal criticism to mark today's first anniversary of Israel's invasion of Lebanon has been accompanied by the imposition of curiews throughout the occupied West Bank, and a new security alert for the 30,000 Israeli troops still sion over the continued in-volvement in Lebanon has provided a sharp reminder to the Government of the growing unpopularity of the army's presence there. Sources close to Mr Menachem Begin, the Prime Minis-ter, reacted angrily to the weekend of national soul searching which also saw the planting of two of the largest booby-trap bombs smuggled into Jerusalem for several years. Both were safely defused.

Following critical analysis which included a four-hour programme on Israel Radio, government officials said: "The orgy of published and broadcast evaluations of the Lebanon was this weekend is harmful to vital Israeli interests and can only make the resolution of the conflict more difficult".

Observers noted that the bitter debate has done more than anything in recent months to point up the deep divisions now threatening the fabric of Israeli society. Many of the local criticisms have been equally, if not more, hostile than those voiced abroad. The officials reflecting the view of Mr Begin commented with a note of exasperation: The Syrians are standing on the sidelines and are watching us with bemused delight. Why should they budge from their position, and evacuate Lebanon, when they can read about discord and dissension in Israel? Why should they pull out if there is pressure in Israel for unconditional withdrawal?" The protests continued yesterday as more reserve soldiers and officers who have pledged to return their Lebanon campaign ribbons to the Defence Ministry, demonstrated outside Cabinet meeting Calls for Mr Begin's resignation and an immediate withdrawal of all Israeli troops from Lebanon dominated the Tel Aviv rally, which came at the end of a week-long march from the Lebanon border by members of the Peace Now As a result of violent anti-war protests in the West Bank, in which six members of the Israeli security forces were injured, the main Palestinian university in Nablus, the largest occupied town, was closed by military order for the rest of Photograph, PLO feud, page 6 years ago he had a transfusion of Haitian blood. And his blood cells suggested the presence of a virus, human Tpresence of a virus, namen r-cell leukaemia, or HTLV for short, which is increasingly being implicated in Aids cases. But what to make of this connexion with the Caribbean and with HTLV? Is it merely circumstantial? Aids patients suffer a collapse in the production of certain white blood cells, the T-helper cells, which normally help the antibodies of the immune system attack invading organisms. The patients fall ill because of of a failure to repel the many microscopic invaders we are all subject to every day.

HTLV could be just one of these invaders. And the link with Haiti might just be a statistical fluke. However, there is other evidence. One in four male homosexuals suffering from Aids in the United States has antibodies against HTLV, showing that their bodies have showing that their bothes have begun a defence against it; but only one in 80 Aids-free homosexnals had the anti-bodies, according to an Ameri-can study recently published in Science. This suggests that only the Aids patients had been exposed to the virus.

In other American work, two out of 33 Aids patients were found to harbour the genes of HTLV, which inte-grate themselves into the genetic material of the human T-cells. And in French work, one case has been indentified as linked with HTLV, and another with a closely-related

Indeed this last clue may indicate why the evidence so far the HTLV-Aids link has been partial: perhaps there is a whole class of viruses like HTLV, but not exactly similar to it, which can infect the T-cells. Different members of the class might induce slightly different antibodies, or have different genetic sequences, so eluding too-precisely defined

However, there are still many nucertainties. HTLV was first indentified as the cause of a rare form of leukaemia in Japan. It also particularly in Haiti. But in Japan, the virus does not appear to cause Aids; and infection with HTLV often caused no symptons of any

Scotland Yard to take lessons from US on investigating crime

American work study experts are to it n Scotland Yard detectives in the latest techniques for assessing and handling intelligence data, based on methods developed for the Pentagon and the counterespionage community.

The techniques, widely used among federal and state law enforcement agencies in the US are being brought to Europe for the first time. They could revolutionize criminal Livestigation over the next decade.

A very small scheme using the techniques was started several years ago after officers visited police in New Jersey, but the decision to widen their use was taken last autumn by Sir Kenneth Newman, the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. An outline was included in the "action plan" drawn up for the force and the Home Office gave its approval several months ago.

means of pulling information into discernible shapes. Sir Kenneth has already spoken of a desire to concentrate police efforts more coherently against crime by improving intelligence so that resources are channelled against targets.

Anacapa's work would help to achieve this by moving Scotland Yard away from the traditional approach of collecting information, filing it and then producing it after a crime. Instead, the information would be put together to build up a picture of suspected criminals with their associates before a crime was committed.

An investigation could then be centred more effectively The company said: "We are rather than using considerable the traditional methods. The head of the investigation might be provided with a more

Cruise men bring housing shortage

By Baron Phillips Property Correspondent

The accelerating cruise missile programme at Greenham Common, near Newbury, is sending property prices soaring and creating a serious local housing shortage.

American servicemen are having to rent or buy homes up to 24 miles away from the camp where the missiles will be based after Christmas. There are now 1,100 airforce personnel on the base, but that figure is expected to double over the next two years while the total American population, including dependants, in and around Newbury will rise to about 5,000.

Naturally, the United States Air Force is keen to play down the impact of the rapidly expanding base. But Lieutenant Bryan Irving, camp spokesman, admitted: "We recognize there is a housing problem in the area, but I feel we are only aggravating a problem which was already here".

The USAF has had to recalculate the number of private homes it will have to rent for its people over the next two years and the present estimate of 300 is based on the assumption that Congress will approve spending on at least 250 family houses on HMS Dauntless, a former Navy base, at near by Burghfield, Lieutenant Irving conceded that they do not know when, or even if, the money will be allocated.

There are now 600 families living outside military accommodation and, as further delays occur on the building programme, more families will have to find homes on the open market.

Ms Alison Salmon, a Shelter officer in Newbury, said there has been a growing homelessness problem in the area since the base began to expand. Mr Terry McColl, deputy director of housing at Newbury District Council, agreed that the housing waiting list was growing and there had been a rapid increase in the number of homeless people coming to the council.

In the past, the council has been able to rent private homes to accommodate people on their waiting lists. That source has now dried up because there is a huge demand for these houses at much higher prices than the council can afford.

There is also a shortage of building land for public or private homes. Newbury Council has asked the Government for a special £10m housing provision because it is concerned about dwindling stocks of council-owned homes

The allegations are made in evidence submitted by Inquest, which is funded partly by Greater London Council to Sh James Hennessey, the Chief Inspector for Prisons, who has been instructed by Mr William Whitelaw, the House Secretary to investigate safeguards against suicide in prisons.

Mr Tony Ward, of Inquest, said surgical stitching without annesthetic was a "blatantly practice." It made a mockery of standard instructions to prison staff that an inmate who attempted suicide should not be disciplined for his actions. Mr Ward claimed that officers at one jail used cardboard to silence bells which prisoners in distress could ring from their cells. The investigation comes after increasing public concern at the number of suicides in Mr Ward said the rate was

The old swing to the right despite Labour promises on pensions

If election campaigns in Britain ever become sufficiently presidential to include the American fashion for bumper stickers, an obvious slogan for those of a right-wing bent will be: "Tories live longer".

Pollsters exist in a state of permanent disharmony with the chicken and the egg. The demographic facts state that people over the age of 55 are more likely to vote Conservative than the population overall, and that women pensioners outnumber their male counterpreference for right-wing causes. Conservatives is just bad for

For the psephologists, who are thankfully spared the whys and wherefores of such details, the plain message from the polls is that those over the age of 55 are more likely to support the Tories, particularly if they are

Although the over-55s may have made a marked shift further towards the Conservatives in the lifetime of the present Government, overall they remain the least volatile of the electoral age groups, and doggedly aloof from the issues which one might expect to engage their attention. They are no more or less interested in the health service than the rest of the electorate, although they are its greatest users.

One of the few areas in which their views are distinct is in the media coverage of the election: they feel very strongly the there has been too much election news on television and in the Labour told to focus on unemployment

By Paul Routledge, Labour Editor

Labour leaders desperate to stem the haemhorrage of voting support told their candidates yesterday to play up the risk to jobs if the Conservatives win a second term of office. The spectre of two million more people unemployed is being

In its daily campaign briefing for candidates, the Labour Party said: "From now until polling day, our campaign must focus on the issues that matter, and on the policies that will attract the voters. Nothing else."

Chief among these is unemployment, and the party insists: We must deal a hammer blow to the Tory message of fatalism and despair, that there is no alternative to mass unemployment and social decay. The internal briefing paper tells Labour candidates to argue that government policies have helped to destroy 2.4 million jobs, and if the Conservatives get back they will follow the s policies. "Nearly two million more jobs would be at risk", the document says.

The party claims that 370,000 jobs are threatened in the public to 100,000 school meals jobs, 60,000 hospital ancillary workers, 50,000 teaching jobs and thousands more in education. local government and the civil

The briefing paper says that 380,000 jobs are vulnerable in public industries. Planned pit closures would cut 50,000 jobs in the coal industry, another 20,000 would go through the further run-down of state steel and 30,000 more from the "overmanned" railways.

There would be a cut of 18,000 jobs from the armed forces and dockyards; 40,000 jobs "would be exported to the USA" with the purchase of Trident submarines, and a further 120,000 jobs would be slashed in gas, electricity, public transport and the postal service.

It also claims that 790,000 jobs are at risk in the manufac-turing industry. "Nearly a quarter of Britain's large industrial companies are in serious financial distress and less than half are expected to survive.

"Foty large firms are being kept afloat in a lifeboat launched by the Bank of England, and over 1,000 companies have been taken into intensive care by the banks. Together, these firms employ some 1,250,000 people. If the Tories are reelected, many will close. High risk sectors are

The party urges candidates to make the point. "That adds up to nearly two million jobs at risk if the Tories get back." Labour's briefing paper admits that "some new jobs will be created in growth sectors" but insists that these will not exceed 240,000 "on even the most optimistic projections".

Labour's new slogan is therefore: "Sack the Tories before they sack you".

Ministers back on the village green

There are few things that petter bring home the reality of democracy than to see high-powered Cabinet ministers out campaigning in their own constituencies.

One hundred miles to the west, in the Vale of Evesham, Peter Walker, Secretary of State for Agriculture, is doing a door to door canvass in a tiny village, conducted at a trot.

There is no sign in Mr Walker's manner of a man who has been in Parliament since 1961 and first entered the Cabinet as far back as 1970. He tackles his canvassing as though he were a first-time candidate trying to earn the right to contest a winnable seat in the next election.

Both of them have safe Conservative majorities. In the last Parliament Worcester returned Mr Walker with a majority of over 11,000, while in Cambridgeshire Mr Pym's majority was twice that size.

However, both constituencies have been affected by boundary changes which are expected to reduce the natural Conservative majority in Mr Pym's seat, now called Cambridgeshire South-East, but to have a more or less neutral impact on Mr Walker. These changes have added about 8,000 urban voters to the sent which Mr Pym is contest-ing but have reduced the number of villages from about 135 to 85. Labour finds solace in canvass returns

Mr Michael Foot's cam-paign enters the final straight today in an air of persisting unreality, with the Labour leader banking on optimistic reports of support for the party from local officials being translated into votes on Thursday.

The campaign trail has been punctuated by enthusiastic, packed rallies and party workers telling Mr Foot that the opinion polls do not reflect their canvass returns.

He has been impressed by their findings but now has finally acknowledged that yesterday's polls showing Labour heading for a disas-trons defeat could not all be "cooked", an allegation he made last week.

A tired-looking Mr Foot told journalists as he travelled by train from Edinburgh to Newcastle upon Tyne on Saturday night that the party faced "a hell of a job" if it was to win, but then added that he believed Labour could win the "don't knows" with its arguments on unemployment. His confidence in reports

His three-week tour has been largely devoid of controversy, sparkle and direction. On occasions it, and Mr Foot, have come to life, but there appears to have been a conscious decision to run a low-key campaign.
That has been justified by party strategists with the argument that the unemployment issue would win Labour the election. It is noticeable that in Mr Foot's speeches, which have become increasingly lacklustre and rambling, there is virtually no reference to his political opponents in the Alliance parties, and his attacks on Mrs Thatcher have been muted. Mr -foot's personal low-key campaign was also designed to limit the number of "own goals" by the Labour leader. That has been largely successful, the biggest gaffes have come from his colleagues. But overall result has been a tour of the hustings by a man whom it was difficult to believe was

Hopeful Steel in strategy talks

By Michael Knipe
Mr David Steel presided over a strategy meeting of the SDP/Liberal Alliance leadership last night with the satisfaction of having seen his cautious prediction of the Alliance's standing in the opinion polls largely confirmed.

Throughout last week he said he would be happy to see the Alliance reach 25 per cent by the weekend, which it did in the Sunday Times Mori Poll, while the Sunday Muror's Marplan gave it 27.5 per cent, a half point ahead of Labour.

The Liberal leader who is

The Liberal leader, who is also leader of the Alliance's election campaign, has stressed since the campaign began that the Alliance can make its greatest strides in winning voters in the last few days of the campaign. This was the pattern of its recent by-election vic-tories, as well as its disaster in

Mr Steel expects the Alliance bandwagon to pick up speed as voters realize the extent of Labour's loss of support and

Admission by Healey

The first admission by the Labour leadership that they could be losing anti-Conservative votes to the Alliance, particularly in Conservative marginals was made last night by Mr Denis Headey, deputy leader of the party.

Returning to his own constituency in Leeds East for the first time since the campaign started, Mr Healey said that some voters were turning to the Alliance as the party with the best chance of fending off a new and extreme Tory Government. People were deeply worried at the prospect of a Conservative victory which would bring a "one-woman dictatorship backed by the provo wing of the Conservative many moderate Conservative supporters might yet swing their backing behind the Alliance, Mr Steel said yesterday during an Independent Radio News phone-in that a lot of Conservative voters would be "actually appalled" at the thought of the kind of policies that would be pursued by a Conservative government with a majority of landslide proportions. Those voters might well decide, he said, that they would rather have a strong moderating Alliance influence.

Commenting on the opinion polls, Mr Steel said: "The curve is upwards and we do seem to have overtaken the Labour Party now. We are coming into the home straight and it is a question of whether we can catch the Tories. The Conservatives undeniably had a huge

The SDP has not however claimed that Sir Peter or Mr James Cobley, his election agent, knew of the buffet offer. Mr Cobley said he had written to Mr Sampson but had been advised by lawyers not to comment further.

Sir Peter said in a statement last night that neither he nor his election agent were aware of any free buffet at any of the Conservative clubs thay had visited in the constituency, nor had they athorized press adver-tising about any of their visits.

Five pilots of the Angolan airline TAAG are said to have been arrested and five others have chosen to remain outside Angola. More significantly, five or six senior MPLA officials are said to have been detained. The scandal, which has not yet been made public, is threatening to bring into the open the whole question of the national leadership. There are suggestions that President dos Santos may stay in titular control by that some of his executive powers may be devolved upon a college of veterans within the 11-man MPLA political bureau, the country's senior organization. This would forestall the risk of a coup reported to have been under discussion among younger Army officers frustrated by an alleged lack of direction and decisiveness at the top.

The diamond scandal came to a head when the Minister of Mines and Industries, Lieutenant-Colonel Bento Ribeiro, called in British mining police to help stop antiggling in the eastern Lunda province, bordering Zambia and Zaire.

Mystery of school killer

A picture released by West German police of Czechoslo-vak-born Karel Charva, aged 34, who went beserk with two pistols at a school near Frankfurt on Friday, killing two adults and three children and wounding 14. He then killed himself.

Yesterday police said he may have not known the teacher who was his first target. Earlier, police thought the gunman, a psychology graduate, probably did know Herr Franz-Adolf Gelhaar since, according to the first statements by the beadmaster, Charva had asked directions to the teacher's class and shot at him first.

The change of view deepened the mystery over the motives of the killer. Police said they adjusted their view after Herr Willi Belz, headmaster of the Freiherr von Stein school, failed to identify a photograph of Charva as the man who asked for directions.

With Octopussy, which has its charity première at the Odeon, Leicester Square, tonight, the cinematic success story of James Bond comes of age. David Hewson flushes out 007 himself

Sadism for the whole family

Caparisoned in Jermyn Street finery, possessed of an irresistible hare to women and endowed with eternal good fortune, Mr James Bond, of Her Majesty's Secret Service, tonight makes his thirteenth entrance into the cinematic lists via

One may smiff at 007, and there are plenty of reasons to do so in the lesser moments of his film career, but no one can take from him his success. The Bond series is the most successful film cycle ever to come out of Britain, and one launched on the modest basis of the Eady Levy, the tax on cinema seats which returns funds to producers in relation to the popularity af their product. Today, 21 years since Sean Connery first strolled on to the screen and ordered a dry Martini, shaken not stirred, r's popularity with the public is as great as ever.

Later this year Connery will return in the role in a Bond rival which has caused considerable chagrin to MGM/UA, the company behind Roger Moore and Octopussy. Talk of the battle of the Bonds, Connery and Moore are old friends, and have been privately swapping stories of the physical difficulties their relative schedules have demanded during filming.

At the moment, discussions are going on to find a suitable vehicle to accommodate what Hollywood views as its three most bankable British stars: Connery, Moore and Michael Caine. In spite of some of the backchat being aimed in Connery's direction, the probability is that he is as much in line for success as Moore.

What Connery's return will serve to emphasize is the fact that the character of Bond, attractive as it may be to the public, is as fluid as its market demands. Little of the original Fleming is intact. Moore, who admits that Fleming has never been his favourite reading, says: "I looked through a few books when I was given the role. There's nothing about Bond in them."

Connery's portrayal, with its mixture of humour, cruelty and cynicism, must remain the actor's Bond. By comparison, Moore is something of a pussycat. Connery is the adult Bond; the political and sexual elements of his films, notably From Russia With Love, continue to say much about the Cold War period finding itself amid the birth of the permissive Sixties. Moore may give a half-hearted lecture on the dangers of unilateralism in Octopussy but he remains safe family entertainment. When President Reagan goes on record as admiring Moore's Bond as a guardian of freedom, the transformation is complete. Connery's character was never the sort to win official approval.

What has turned the Moore films intosuch a successful production cycle is the reworking of the old mixture of sex, thrills, exotic locations and comedy. The first 15 minutes of Octopussy are masterly, notably for the visual jokes which, at their hest are on a par with the kind of complex pyrotechnics seen in Chuck Jones's Road Runner Cartoons for Warner Brothers.

Moore likes the cartoon analogy. "We are not Peckinpah - there is very little blood and we don't lay the violence on with the trowel. But you've got to remember that there are some countries where they ban Tom and Jerry for the violence. We fill it up with a lot of jokes that's what makes the violence acceptable.

Cubby [Broccoli, the veteran Bond producer] once called it sadism for the Moore shows a delicate decorum when estioned about the President of America iving such a glowing testimonial. Reagan said what Leslic Charteris said about the Saint - he's a modern-day Robin Hood Well. I haven't seen Bond doing too much robbing the rich to feed the poor, but maybe Robin Hood didn't either. Bond is not really a spy. Spies are faceless. I can't walk into any bar in the world without some girl knowing that I take a Martini shaken not stirred."

And he is equally disarming about the relative merits of financial security against professional acclaim. "I always wanted to have a career like Rex Harrison, who was an actor who made movies. It didn't work out that way - I'm a movie actor. The longer I am away from the theatre the more nervous I am about going back. I should get out and exercise my legs, but I'm so exhausted by the time I finish a picture. I don't want to go and rehearse a picture. I don't want to go and rehearse a play - Pd much rather enjoy myself. I'd be a sitting duck - the critics would love to think here's a bloody movie actor on the stage. Then I have the habit of working in films where, if someone drops a hammer. I stop. I could see myself in the theatre stopping every time someone went to the toilet. If circumstances financially said I had to get off my burn and do a play, I would have done it.

"But they never have - it's a doubleedged sword. Bond doesn't win awards, except perhaps for the song and the special effects. It's like Spielberg - the ones the public really like never get the award. I can't understand that.'

Writers

It has taken decades for PLR to become law, and it is the most important single thing that has happened to book writers since they have able to retain copyright in their work. A. P. Herbert and John Brophy were prominent among the early campaigners, and a generation later John Brophy's daughter Brigid is more responsible than any other individual for seeing the principle enshrined on the statute book, and that the scheme, as administered by the registrar at Stockton-on-Tees,

The last day of this month is the closing date for authors, coauthors and illustrators to register if they are to have a share of the first annual handoul. Given the years taken to achieve PLR, it is depressing that only 5,000 authors, with an average of eight books each, have applied. Thousands more have tried to master the application form, and failed. Still, as one author who has completed and returned the form says, "The fewer writers who apply, the more money there'll be to divide among those of us who do". Another commented that some accountants would charge £5.000 to fill in the form for a successful and

The total sum to be distributed in the first year is £2m less the cost of administration about £400,000. No doubt, if the total was £20m, the cost of administration would be greatly in excess of £2m.

PLR is, as its name insists, a right, not a benevolence. Therefore it is galling to authors to have to have their forms witnessed by a JP or a lawyer. How many authors know, or know they know, a JP? How many authors can afford a lawyer, even if they are able to

A writer may remember the titles of his books. Almost definitely, especially books were published more than a few years ago, he will not know the International Standard Book Number, that essential code in 1983 for any book.

The PLR form requests him to list ISBNs. They are for computers and light pens, those contraptions which make it easy for you to acquire, by number rather than author or title, the books you desire from your local library. I am being a trifle unfair: if you do not know your ISBNs - and most books have acquired them since they were published - the registrar and his staff will supply you with them. There are other problems; more to do with bureaucracy than literature. If an author has a co-author it is essential to persuade him to sign the form authors having agreed between themselves in what proportion PLR should be distributed. This may be any division, provided the authors agree. What happens if a writer hungry for PLR cannot locate his co-author, or the collaborator is dead? No PLR is paid to anyone. This is sheer bureaucratic perversity, and typical of governments respect for contemporary writing to penalize - indeed disqualify - a living author if

This applies not least to children's authors. A book is not a book unless it has 32 printed pages. Likewise with poetry or a play - tough luck. Samuel Beckett (but you are not a British national, so not

Editors and translators are not eligible. Nor are publishers. Nevertheless, some of them, led by Peter Owen, think they should receive a share. Most have ceased to protest because they realize that the sums involved will be, by their standards, small. To authors with, say, a dozen books being borrowed from libraries an annual payment of £1,000 could make it possible for them to struggle through another book,

Even Caciuleanu's solo Mess Around, to two jazz numbers, which he must have danced many hundreds of times, still looks newly made, with its loose-limbed virtuosity and unexpected reversals to add Claudine Orvain (to a Rossini overture) is well named: without a word, their movements are a constant exchange of thoughts and attitudes, but all in dance, not mime.

The only comparable play I know is Thornton Wilder's The leagues also contributed much Long Christmas Dinner; but to a neat première of a happy Gurney vastly improves on that model by resisting pathos and ignoring chronology. His business is with the crosion of Paul Griffiths manners, and he begins in the present by contrasting the brisk visit by a no-nonsense house-buyer with the leisurely breakaccount that each of Brahms's fast of a Roosevelt-era father to major chamber works so drains the emotions that it is seldom whom the morning ceremony of possible to listen to more than newspaper and coffee is more important than getting his son to school on time.

Gurney has a wonderful ear for the evasive nuances of authoritarian speech: particularly for pre-war parents coax-ing their children before explod-ing into defeated commands, or employers putting in long-suffering requests to the kitchen staff ("Sometimes I think it is almost better if we do things ourseives").

Throughout the sequence of overlapping scenes, with actors switching from childhood to old

> Sometimes they reverse inside a single scene, as where a hard-selling architect and his analyst client swop the power relationship halfway through, with the architect confessing his atavistic hatred of rooms such as this. Otherwise the absurdity of a traditional father stalking out to do battle, on behalf of a relative who has been insulted in the club's steam room, is evenly matched by the sight of a high-school boy photographing his aunt's Waterford glass and fingerbowls to illustrate an anthropology project on the eating habits of vanishing cultures. What the play does, in short, is connect the world of Wharton to that of

Television . Singing thoughts

Bernard Levin was back on BBC2 on Saturday night with the first of eight Levin Interviews. Mr Levin's qualities as interviewer include his ability to attract substantial subjects and his willingness to let them finish their sentences, a technique uncommon enough to be almost revolutionary.

But, if I were seized in a hammerlock and compelled to utter a criticism of Mr Levin, I think I would concede that, when his admiration for a subject is unbounded, he lets it show too early, thereby denying us the chance to let our own affections flow freely rather than at someone else's behest.

If he persists in this then it would seem only fair, should he get someone he is not so keen

Somebody said that one should never trust a man who starts the working day with his shirt-collar button undone and his tie loosened. David Bowie took the stage in London last week, for the first time in five years, with his bow-tie already hanging loose. Possibly he does not know how to knot a proper bow-tie; at any rate, it see an appropriate symbol for the father of modern pop poseology, the man who turned attitude into art and taught Brecht to

You could tell from the full cut of his trousers that he had been away. No one who was in Britain a couple of years ago, when Blue Rondo à la Turk and their pais were discrediting the zoot-suit as a hot fashion item, would have turned up in the baggy yellow affair with which he began this concert, or the pale green braided example which succeeded it after the intermission. It seemed strange, too, that he should choose to dress up his 10 musicians in the Rag Week gear of the Bonzo Dog Doo Dah Band.

It seemed even stranger when a truly dreadful version of the Velvet Underground's "White Light, White Heat", a superfluous show-band saxophone arrangement adding a flabby belly to what was once a song of desperation.

The quality of Bowie's imagination and the importance of his influence cannot be doubted, but one of the problems of his concerts is that his songs are completed structures, not susceptible to spon-taneous variation. Theatre is the answer, and the distraction: there were many dramatic tricks varied dynamics and to Bowie's and stunts in the second half, classy crooning against the some enjoyable. At Volkswagen we rust-proof our cars while we are building them.

Not afterwards when the rot may have already started. And your investment has begun to erode away.

For good measure we flood the inside of the doors and other cavities with around 200 litres of wax, using our own patented process.

every nook and cranny has been reached.

To discourage rust even further, we bond vulnerable joins such as the edges of bonnets, boot lids and doors, with a special rust inhibiting adhesive. We even go to the lengths of placing strips of zinc between the wings and body.

And we always use galvanised bolts to hold them all together. Because we don't want them to be held together with rust.

All Jetta exhausts are aluminised to give them a much longer lifespan. And in common with all Volkswagens, the Jetta has a roof underneath, covered with lashings of bitumen wax, to keep out the elements.

We're the only manufacturer to give you a 3-year Because this is the only way we can be certain that paint warranty on top of a 6-year body protection warranty.

And incidentally we do not stipulate any intermediate inspections, or retreatments.

So you know that, however long you keep your Jetta, it'll keep its price up.

And in the end you'll find yourself in a sellers' market. But hasn't that always been a very good reason for investing in a Volkswagen?

By Clive Aslet

We sat at a white table with legs like a space probe. The chairs were white, the walls were white. A pervasive hush somehow gave the impression of hidden technology smoothly at work.

This was the office of Norman Foster, winner of this year's Royal Institute of British Architects gold medal. Except for a number of architectural models, including one for a Renault warehouse near Swindon iust returned from Renault's head office in Paris, the room was almost bare. There was nothing on the table except a sketchbook that Foster, who wore an open-necked shirt and a lemon-coloured Ralph Lauren sweater, had brought with him. On the wall was a photograph of the space module from which the aesthetic of the table, designed by Foster Associates, was in part derived.

He had not been able to meet me at his home, because it was being rebuilt. (Plans exhibited at the Heinz Gallery a little while ago show that it will be a conjuror's palace of sophisticated gadgetry, flexible to meet the expanding demands of new children or new clectronics.) But when I had gone through the automatically opening doors into the office and braved the cool-looking receptionist, he said that this was also in a state of flux. He apologised for the mess. It was some time before I realised what he meant. Although I did see parts of a full scale ceiling', they don't actually open the mock-up of a section of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank piled discreetly in a corner, the usual rubbish of office life abandoned coffee cups - was conspicuous by its absence.

Foster's brand of High Tech - the style of which he and his former partner, Richard Rogers, are the two leading exponents in Britain – does not It is even possible to take kindly to clutter. In contrast to the spaghetti of exposed working parts that festoons Rogers's work, Foster's buildings are sleekly regular - coolly, even coldly Classic. There is an element of fun, as in the banks of escalators providing a spectacle of perpetuum mobile for the workforce at the heart of the Willis Faber headquarters, Ipswich; but the escalators lie inside a smooth wall of reflecting glass, slinking around the edges of the 2.4 acre site. Foster lists his hobbies as running and flying aircraft; objects are not allowed to pile up around him. "No other architect", the RIBA citation pronounces, "has so effectively drawn the advanced modern is now obsolete and should be replaced technology of the acrospace and with "back to the interview, the lunch clectronic worlds into architecture." or the meeting", because it is in these The Sainsbury Centre in Norwich, a silver arts-hanger of such wizardry as to outshine the objects it contains, is clad in superplastic aluminium panels, a revolutionary material for the building trade. One takes for granted the performance of certain things outside the building context. One does not expect one's car to leak - or if it does, it is a major event. But a lot of roofing materials do not come with any guarantee." Yet Foster feels that the technology of his buildings has been overstressed:

"Building are about people and for people." It is a truism, but one that he likes to emphasize. "We are concerned with what makes a building a good place to be. As well as all the technology, the Ipswich building has the natural qualities of sunlight coming down into the core, and roof gardens for the work force."

Will it be a more human, less twenty-first century Norman Foster who mounts the rostrum to receive the gold medal on June 21?

He takes satisfaction in working with small workshops – "almost the local blacksmith" – in many of the processes for his buildings. Surprisingly little of his industrial-style furniture is, in fact, ready made. The table at which we were sitting was a case in point, having been produced specially, although made by an industrial sub-contractor rather than a furniture

"Through an understanding of the industrial process and the materials, we are able to harness industry almost on a cottage basis, with quite small production runs," he says. This is both better and cheaper than taking the off-the-peg product. "Most of the things which appear in catalogues only give the illusion of being ready made. In reality, when you order something, they then roll up their sleeves and make it for you. So if you say, 'I will have x thousand metres of your door, run into the cupboard and pull it out; they put in motion an industrial

It is even possible to detect an Artsand-Crafts note in the new Foster. "Around us are things that in a way are hand-crafted, although hand crafting is something usually associated with scrubbed-pine furniture and health food restaurants." The office has recently been holding "fruitful conver-sations" with John Makepeace, the traditional cabinet maker.

Foster is a fluent talker. And when he talks, he draws - "as long as I can remember I have always been drawing". To clients probably more familiar with the written word or the printed column of figures, it must be persuasive. These skills are vital in the 1980s: or the meeting", because it is in these discussions that the design is con-

When I saw him, Foster had just returned from a weekend at an hotel in Arundel spent "brainstorming" with the heads of BBC radio to decide what kind of building was needed for the Langham site. Foster sees it as a semipublic, semi-private building, like the Galleria in Milan or, intriguingly, the Lancaster and Barton Arcades in Manchester, his home town.

Public relations are now such a major part of architecture that Foster regards the Fred Olsen Centre in the Port of London, built in the 1960s, as a key building in his career. "In that project we were not only involved with the upper echelons of management, but with local management, such as the docks manager, who subsequently has become a director of Olsen's but at that time was very much the manager who would settle some disputes literally with fisticuffs - I'm not suggesting that was an on-going style of management -and, vitally, with the unions."

He is proud that, when the building opened, it was the union representative who defended the use of one-way mirrors, feared by some as a management tool for spying, on the grounds that it saved heat and did away with the need for curtains, allowing workers unimpaired views through the win-

At 47, in terms of the architectural profession, with its long training and few prestige commissions, Foster is young Last year the gold medal went to the long-retired Berthold Lubetkin, aged 81. Foster's early success is all the more remarkable since he did not enter an architect's office until he was 20, which was "rather late in the day".

On leaving school after O levels, he went into the City Treasurer's department of Manchester Council. Then came National Service. "I did electronics in the Air Force. I came into an After Manchester, Foster won a architect's office on the contract Henry scholarship to Yale, where he management side, by virtue of my accounting and financial background of sorts." There it dawned on him that he could be an architect' - an aspiration that had seemed beyond reach. "So I decided to confront the guy who ran the practice and say, 'Look, it is my intention, if I can do it, to study architecture'. He said: 'How the hell can you get into a school of architecture if you left school at 16 and haven t got any work to show? I said I had been doing work in the evenings. I brought it in, and there and then he gave me a house to design."

He worked his way through Man-chester University (having left school early, he could not get a grant) by winning prizes and doing architectural perspectives. "I was brought up in an architectural school with a very strong emphasis on things like the historical orders and measured drawing - those kinds of technical skills. It was the tailend of that.

the tail-end of a tradition of architectplanners, where much more recently architects and planners have been trained separately. A lot of planners think overly in two dimensions and think overly in political terms, rather than just of the wider scale end, as it were, of an architectural process.'

Can the influence of Manchester still be seen on his work? Foster is notoriously meticulous about detailing, supposedly choosing every last screwhead in his buildings himself. Planning is also something he stresses.

"The site is a prime generator of the building. For Willis Faber, the decision to do a low building, which would follow and hug and recreate that kind of random street pattern of a medieval market town rather than impose on it a kind of alien so-called 'modern' geometry of right angles, that very organic response to that street pattern, takes stock of the typical spaces of a market town in a northern latitude. It's not a piazza. A lot of attempts to create piazzas in England have been doomed, because there are already enough open wind-swept spaces.

Without prompting, Foster volun-teers an article of faith: "I suppose we regard the fix of time and cost as something really quite sacred. For 20-odd years we have been rigidly under budget, under time."

How confident is he about the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank headquarters in Hongkong labelled, mis-leadingly, the Most Expensive Office Block in the World by The Sunday Times and others? Press reports say it could massively exceed the estimate, reaching what has been projected as a final cost of £600m.

Foster laughs this away as "misinformation". Receiving the high-prestige American Reynolds Award twice or, as a foreigner, winning the competition to build a national athletics stadium in Germany seem events that might have been reported more widely, but were not. Bad news is news. On Hongkong: "At this stage it is a minimal percentage over. There is still between 20 and 30 per cent of that contract to be sublet. The essence of cost planning is not that you are going to get every element spot on target, but that some are going to be under and some are going to be over. At the end of the day - ideally - the books balance." One thing is certain: with its stepped-back profile and hanging gardens, the building has already baffled architectural critics, who have referred to Babylonian and Gothic, early Chinese and Expressionist styles in their attempts to decode it.

His next projects include a lowenergy house developed with Buckminister Fuller and a "low-profile" building, "more than normally discreet", for London's proposed Third Airport at Stanstead. All Foster's media skills will be needed for that

At 33, producer Jeremy Thomas is something of a phenomenon. Over the past seven years he has produced six movies. including Jerzy Skolimowski's The Shout, which won the Best Film Award at Cannes in 1977. This year he is responsible for two films: Eureka, directed by Nicolas Roeg and starring Gene Hackman, and Merry Christmas Mr Lawrence, an extraordinary Anglo-Japanese project directed by Nagusa China and starring David Rowie 26. Oshima and starring David Bowie as a British prisoner of war. And he admits, with some amusement, "I haven't yet had a

The confidence behind such a confession may have something to do with the fact that he is a movie child. His father (Ralph) and his uncle (Gerald) were both film directors in the heyday of the regular British film industry. He grew up "in Hollywood-in-England, Bucks, surrounded Hollywood-in-England, Bucks, surrounded by film people, with Dirk Bogarde coming round for lunch and all that." He began his professional career at the film labs in Denham, working his way through the ranks to become a film editor and then, almost by accident, the producer of an Australian picture called Mad Dog, which was directed by a friend. "We somehow raised the money, though I was totally green, Dennis Hopper from Eusy Rider had been cast. We went out to Tahos, New been cast. We went out to Tahos, New Mexico, to meet him and this character came to the airport in a jeep with the stetson hat, and shark's teeth round his neck, and there, reincarnated, was my childhood hero. But the picture was a nightnare to make."

The word "chaos" features frequently in Jeremy Thomas's conversation, and the walls of his tiny office in Soho testify to the more bizarre moments of his career. Pinned up are several snaps of the Sex Pistols - the legacy of three years work nurturing the film which eventually came out as The Great Rock in Roll Swindle in 1980. "I was offered it partly because no one else would take it on, in 1978, when it was all happening." Film school student Julien Temple had shot some footage; then Russ Meyer, humourist and American porn director, came in on the project. The group's manager and svengali, Malcolm McLaren was heavily involved. So, at one stage, was theatre and film impresario Michael White. "It was this and then that. Headlines in the papers. Chaos. Largely due to the anarchy prevailing at the time.

Thomas's Japanese project, based on a novel by Laurens Van der Post and to be his films so far - from independent sources. In this case that means a group of Japanese investors, including the film's director, a British bank, and a New Zealand tax shelter deal. Their contributions add up to $5m, which is what the movie cost to shoot on location in the Cook Islands, in the South Pacific.

Thomas acknowledges that this sort of project sets him apart from his peers. They probably don't understand why I make films like this, because they are more difficult to do. But they're all visibly well-crafted, films of quality and long life, mounted for a good price. So I think I'll go on being able to make films even without an out-and-out hit."

Merry Christmas Mr Lawrence falls within an area that Thomas now recognises as his own: "Bringing together very varied cultural influences." Thomas and Oshima are already planning another film, set in Paris this time. Meanwhile he and Roeg are to make a film from Terry Johnson's Royal Court play, Insignificance, and Thomas is going to produce a project based on Colin MacInnes' story of teenage and adulthood in the 1950s. Absolute Beginners, to be directed by Julien Temple.

Before he slipped into editing, and then across into producing. Thomas had intended to be a director, following in the family path. But, he says, "you need a tremendous amount of bravery. Directing is not only a question of technique, It's something else." But will be take the plunge? "I'm trying."

And what does he feel about the producer's role? "I enjoy it. Even if I direct, want to continue producing I con't easily. I want to continue producing. I can't really understand producers putting themselves up as heroes, though. Film is either a group thing, a family thing. Or it's a director's film. It is not, as such, a producer's medium."

"I must warn you. I'm useless to interview. I'm horribly discreet." To kick off with such a revealing remark was an encouragement. For Dame Ninette de Valois meant to indicate that she would not be drawn into talking about people, either to praise or to blame, that she abhors the fashion for revelatory blemishes one has striven hard to conceal; that she detests gossip and But she said more than she meant to say, it is typical of her to assume that I should hardly want to talk about herself. Modesty of this order is rare indeed, and at first sight stonishing in a woman who has helped shape the cultural history of England in the twentieth century. Yet it is in keeping with her character; all her achievements have been for the Royal Ballet, not for herself. She has been ruthless (and wise) in her pursuit of glory and excellence for her dancers, totally indifferent to whether she should receive the credit for having done so. Ninette de Valois has pride; she has no vanity.

When the Bolshoi Ballet were on a visit to London, they were perplexed to see Dame Ninette in the selfservice canteen beneath the Opera House lining up with her tray behind at least twenty others, including grubby stage-hands and sweaty cygnets. Maris Liepa, one of the few who spoke English, voiced their bewilderment. "Why is she

Because she wants some shepberd's pie." The answer did not satisfy. The Russians, who are used to having one eating place for principal dancers, another for corps de ballet, another for workmen, thought that their supposed classlessness was being gently satirized by this odd demonstration. They simply could not understand that the founder and creator of the Royal Ballet should receive no special treatment, still less that she should

Why Madam is a winner on points and persisted. Now, no one would dream of calling her anything else.

In the ballet world, where daring is an ordinary term, Madam stands firm as a figure of propriety and decorum. She is emphatically not theatrical; flam-boyant, or wild. The most colourful word she might use is "swindle". and generations of dancers given to looser language have lowered their voices and sweetened their tongues at her approach. Her moral influence, no less than her cultural achievements, has been enormous

This is not to say that Madam is austere. She has a beguiling sense of fun and enjoys a giggle, throwing her head back to savour the humour. She is an easy, relaxing convergationalist, except when a point of principle is at stake, when she will present arguments cogently and forcefully, hugging the last word. When I suggested that audiences at Covent Garden sometimes dressed shabbily, she was quick to put me right. "Before the war, andiences in England were always overdressed. There was consternation when Thomas Beecham dared to appear in shirt-sleeves at a rehearsall But in the great opera houses of Europe it was never the fashion to dress up.
After all, a state theatre should belong to the people, shouldn't it?"

Tradition is the deepest value which Madam cherishes, fittingly for someone who has invented a tradition in English dancing. She is herself the product of several traditions. Born in County Wicklow, Ireland, 85 years ago, in a well-to-do Anglo-Irish family teetering on the edge of impoverishment, she in-herited a Victorian sense of discipline tempered by gentle Irish whimsy, There is also some Scottish thrift in her blood (her great-grandmother wrote the famous Memoirs of a Highland Lady), and some French aristocratic bearing. She is descended from both the Montmorencys and a branch of the de Valois family, from whom she took her professional name. Her real name is Edris Stannis, 'Edris' being taken from a character in Marie Corelli's novel Ardath - "Edris is not so much sweet woman as most perfect angel! A dream of Heaven made

As a girl, she began her professional career in the bosom of another tradition, that of the music hall (she appeared with George Robey), and performed "fancy dancing" on the end of Brighton Pier. When she graduated to ballet, she was taught in the oldest school, the French, then took lessons from Cocchiti, the great Italian teacher, and joined Diaghiley's company for two years, absorbing the Russian influence. No wonder, then, with so many traditional echoes informing her intellingence, she should be an establisher rather than an innovator. It was an accident of medical history which compelled Ninette de Valois to give up dancing at the age of 25. Having suffered persistent pain in her left side, which she had attributed to he normal agonies of a dancer's life (andiences would be surprised if they knew how much routine pain dancers tolerate every day), she at length discovered that had been stricken for years with polio. "I wasn't sorry to give up; it hurt too much." A lesser woman would have disappeared from the records, but her brave spirit could not envisage inactivity. There was at that time no balletic tradition in England Bold and stubborn, she determined to start one, drawing on her deep conviction that the time was right. In 1931 she founded her Academy of Choreographic Art with just six students (this eventually grew into the Royal Ballet School, now one of the finest in the world and the cradle of an immediately identifiable English style), and in the same year, her little group of dancers. Of necessity, she became a choreographer, creating 17 of the company's first 22 ballets, and an administrator with guts and genius in equal measure. She persuaded Lilian Baylis to give her a theatre (Sadler's Wells), she enticed Frederick Ashton away from the other fledgling group founded by Marie Rambert and she signed on as musical director the marvellous Constant Lambert. From such tiny beginnings grew the Royal Ballet which has since given the world scores of brilliant dancers, and half a dozen of international and historic

"To open our own opera house after the war was very important. It meant we had a home," And not any old home. either, but the correct and fitting one. Sol Hurok, the American impresario, begged Madam to take her company to New York, where he had a small theatre ready for them. But she resisted. "I felt that we should not make the right impact in anything less than the Metropolitan Opera House, and we should do better to wait." An English ballet company in a Broadway theatre in 1947 would have aroused some interest; at the Met in 1949 it created a sensation, providing one of the most historic occasions in the theatrical history of New York. How did Ninette de Valois do it? First of all, she has consistently been concerned with the future. "You cannot expect dancers to take the long view. They don't always know what is best for them." And she believes in the virtues of discipline. Generations of dancers have been terrified of displeasing her, aninhibition which makes for powerful concentration. Did she think she was a disciplinarian? "Well, so many people must have told you that I am, so there is no point in denying it, is there?" It shows in the way she creates her ballets, which are thoroughly worked out in her own mind before she takes them to the dancers, imposing her pattern on their talents. It shows also in her desire not to allow dancers to perform as often as they might wish Creative work suffers from too much trundling around, and our company was never at its best after a gruelling tour."

Her abhorrence of complacency leads her continually to question standards, never to be satisfied, always to exhort greater effort, a habit which some have found irritating and undermining.

Her energy shows no sign of abating. She still takes a great interest in the school and is lighted at their recent success with English country dances, which she has been recommending for years. She is frequently to be seen at the Opera House, which suggests to some colleagues that she is reluctant to lose control, a view which she would heartily contest. But it is true she does like to be consulted on all important decisions, and will not yield to other opinions without a fight. Deference is not grudgingly paid to a woman who might be harsh in debate, but who has proven so often to be fired by vision and sustained by experience. The paradoxical responses she evokes were summed up by one who said: "She is wilful, arbitrary, inspired".

Dame Ninette lives in a groundfloor flat opposite the river in Barnes, with her charming doctor husband, Arthur Connell, whom she married nearly 50 year ago, who is the only person in the world to call her Edris. The flat is full of sensible chairs with straight, hard backs and furniture by no means ostentations. A handsome, plain Edwardian wall-clock ticks loudly. Madam is clearly not a boarder; hardly anything here gives away the identity of the inhabitants nor is there anything superfluous; it is said she begrudges every penny, especially those spent Until very recently the Connells lived in a little house along the road. But they had to leave it whenthe stairs became too much for Dame Ninette. I realized, with a shock, that she had been in pain eith arthritis throughout two hours we had been together, she wears a plastic collar covered by a scarf, which one tends not to notice. When I went to shake her hand, on departure, she withdrew it as if she had touched a hot iron. Yet she never once complained.

She shops in Barnes High Street ("complete strangers seem to know me. Isn't it amazing? That's what television does") and does her own cooking. Her greatest pleasure now is reading the classics, and her most useful piece of furniture the bookcase, stuffed with Shakespeare, Tolstoy, Trollope, George Eliot, Hardy, and her great favourite, Jane Austen. "There would be nothing worse than not being able to read", she says.

"You should read the classics once every five years, and discover them each time with a fresh eye. I recently returned to Milton. Marvellous!"She also enjoys writing, and had some of her poems read at the Shakespeare Institute in Stratford. Yet she has never kept a diary, that would be 'indiscreet'. One can see why Natalia Makarova once said: "If Madam were a man I would have married her. She makes me think".

Of course, Dame Ninette is such a public figure that celebrations of her achievements and stirling character are frequent. It is still something of an ordeal for her to appear on stage and receive adulation, for she is at heart a shy woman. "I have never felt comfortable taking a curtain call: Fred Ashton had to tell me not to hold the flowers upside down like an umbrella. I still try to remember that

It is high time to explain that the Denver Shoe is a misnomer for the nasty contraption now in London's streets. What we have here is the British-made Wheelok P, a two-choc device which clamps either side of the wheel, and the Bulldog 11 T, a calliper model, for larger vehicles. We are using the Denver tag only because a similar clamp has been in use there since 1955. In view of the GLC's tireless campaign to introduce these instruments, I suggest a more fitting name would be the South Bank Shoe.

Overshadowing any such retreat to a 28-mile line parallel with the Al-Awali river is the threat of a new war with Syria. Neither the war-weary Israeliublic nor the politically vulnerable Begin coalition appears anxious for such a conflict, but among both there is an assessment that given present circumstances in Lebanon, combined with the stubborn attitude of the Soviet-backed Syrian regime, it may soon become inevitable. A senior Defence Ministry official explained: "Israel does not want confrontation but we can offer no guarantee that limited clashes will remain limited. In fact, we can guarantee the opposite."

EEC: figuring out the facts

Monday, June 6 - the Stuttgart summit day that never was. This day Mrs Thatcher was to have queened it on the European stage, showing that international "leader-" ship" which she modestly tells us has been forced upon her, and bringing our "own money" back by getting a massive rebate on our contribution to the Euro-budget. Ever since she told our Euro partners that she could not make it, the Conservatives (and the Alliance for that matter) have been lying low about the alleged benefits of our EEC membership and their policies for the future of the Community if we stay in.

Instead, the Conservatives have come up with a negative — the "2,500,000 jobs at risk" if we pull out. Anyone can play the statistic scare game, and many pro-Marketeers do. There was, of course, the keteers do. There was, of course, the warning by the European Movement during the 1975 referendum campaign that if Britain came out, unemployment would rise to three million (it was then 831,000 under a Labour government). Britain voted to stay in, and unemployment has risen to 3,330,000.

Recently the British members of the European Commission, Ivor Richard and Christopher Tugendhat – whose jobs depend on our staying in – have said that withdrawal would mean five million out of how they arrive at this figure, which does not even tally with the Tory one. But at election time any figure does not even tally with the Tory one. But at election time any figure will do for propaganda purposes.

So let us try to establish the truth. Five and a half million people are employed in British manufacturing industry, and only one-twelfth of their products go to EEC countries, so even if all their exports to Europe stopped dead, we would be talking about 458,000 jobs. Double that for knock-on effects and we are still below one million.

below one million.

Ah, the Tories retort, West Germany is our biggest single export market. Maybe, but also one of our least profitable. In the 12 months to August 1982 our visible trade with Germany was £1,396 in the red, a deficit exceeded only in our trade with Japan. (Hansard 18,11,82, col

In fact Europe has proved a poor market for us. Last year (same Hansard reference) the countries with whom we earned a surplus were overwhelmingly outside the EEC. In fact it was our trade with the EEC JUNE X4 83 Barbara Castle countries which largely accounted for our overall £2,256m deficit. The truth is that even the most ardent pro-Marketeers have been bitterly disappointed with the economic results of our member-ship. Nor have the other promised advantages materialized. Agricultural spending still takes the lion's share of the Euro-budget (about two-thirds). After last year's excessive farm price increase, food surpluses have shot up again to astronomic heights. Britain is still the second largest net contributor, though we have the third weakest economy. The outlook for the 1984 Eurobudget is menacing. Even allowing for a British rebate which gives us less than half of our "own money" back, spending will go through the ceiling of 1 per cent VAT. The only way the budget can be balanced, unless more money is raised from member countries, is by trimming the already derisory allocations for the anti-unemployment policy.

As The Economist put it on May 7: "The EEC will go broke next year unless some lucky fluke occurs." It added: "If Mrs Thatcher thinks she can achieve a triumph at Stuttgart to help launch a June election cam-paign, she may be in for a nasty shock." That is why she decided not

The Commission calls on mem-ber governments for more money without any evidence that it would be wisely spent or that it would do more than lead to a more elaborate and wasteful bureaucracy. It is not Labour, therefore, which should be on the defensive about its EEC policy. It is those parties which lie down as supinely as Ted Heath did in 1972 and allow the Community to ride roughshod over our legitimate national interests.

The Community is in crisis. Only a British government willing to take Britain out, if necessary, will be able to force a fundamental revision of its rules and aims, giving us the freedom to shed the ludicrous burden of the common agricultural policy and to negotiate healthier trading relationships.

Mrs Thatcher's trimming both ways will no longer do.

Ferret-free, at Labour's peril

It was obvious something had become disjointed in the framework of the universe when my usually mild-mannered stepfather threatened to break the neck of the village vicar. "It's not 1984 you know, not yet," my enraged parent shouted as the man of the cloth tried to hide behind the bus stop. A raw nerve in the body politic of South Yorkshire lay exposed - I had experienced at first hand the unconsidered, yet crucial, ferret factor of this election.

The vicar, known in the village to be a Labour supporter with CND sympathies, had established a nature reserve in his churchyard, in the middle of an area with one of the largest rat populations in the country. Since before Geoff Boycott, old men used to take their ferrets, whippets and terriers to murder the odd rat and catch a few rabbits.

From the best possible motives the vicar decided to declare the churchyard a ferret-free zone, banning dogs and anything else which threatened the armies of wildlife around the graves.

My stepfather was ordered out with the family bull terrier, even though it was pointed out that, as there were no bulls grazing among the plaster angels, the dog could not be regarded as a threat. Suddenly, in an area with the type of unemploy-ment problems beyond the wildest dreams of southern social workers, ferrets have become a symbol of

This explanation of the threat to the cleric flowed out in the usually silent lunchtime game of dominoes.
"It's one of the last pleasures we have left to go out with a ferret or a whippet. It's not cruel, either. Why don't the Labour Party ask folk like us before writing their manifesto?"
my Uncle Albert said. Many agree with him.

A meeting of more than 100 trade unionists at the Huddersfield Friendly and Trades Club unanimously passed a resolution promismously passed a resolution promis-ing to fight any party dragging, "hunting, shooting, fishing, ferret-ing, falconry and any field sport" into politics. This is despite the fact that Mr Michael Foot has criticized "the organized savagery of blood sports," and promises to ban all hunting with dogs should he be elected. It is not known where Foot's tures might never glare, Tebbit-like, own dog Dizzy stands on the issue, at a rabbit again. When asked about his position on the weekend pastimes of his members he said: "The NUM is and always has been opposed to the barbaric blood sports, including fox hunting. Our members are fully in support of our policy." My mother could not believe that the holy one had said such a thing: "I thought he was against the rich who try to keep people off private land. A lot of men go ferreting to help feed their families."

Ferrets, it was agreed, should certainly be an issue at the next Labour Party conference. "We are always having trendy ideas foisted on us," a man with a whippet said. After this election they might take a bit more notice of the actual voter." When I rang Labour Party headquarters the policy on ferrets seemed to be confused. "I think people have been saying conflicting things and we will be having a rethink," a spokesman said. But it will probably be too late for this election. "We have had quite a number of people saying they want to stop their political levy," the British Field Sports Society said, Mr. Brian, Toon of the Masters, of Brian Toon of the Masters' of Foxhounds Association added: "Opposition among trade unionists to the Labour Party's proposed ban is widespread."

Ferrets have often done stalwart national service. An army of ferrets was used by a conservation group to rid Stonehenge in Wiltshire of a plague of rabbits threatening to undermine the foundations.

A ferret solved the problem of filming the royal wedding for one television company. A draw string in a conduit used for a vital cable had broken, but a ferret, tempted by a juicy piece of bacon, shot through the pipe attached to a nylon line. A lot of Birmingham's telephone lines were laid in the same way, though in those days they used live rats as the

On another occasion he dismisses Catholic workers from his yard – as indeed happened at the time – saying that the other workers would not work alongside men they did not trust. which the vast and unlovely face of Stormont had not yet been built - out of a sense of noblesse oblige. The austere Dublin lawyer Carson was followed as Ulster's leader by a succession of military gentlemen. They expressed the national sentimoderated it. The line ran out with Terence O'Neill and James Chichester-Clark (as they then were; both Eton and Irish Guards) who could no longer control Northern Ireland, not just the violence on the Catholic side but the Protestant also. That fact was tacitly recognized with the proroguing of Stormont in 1972. Brian Faulkner came and went, the great Protestant strike put paid to a first attempt at power sharing. The old Unionist party began to break up. Its traditional leaders departed, some to form the wellintentioned, non-sectarian Alliance party, some quitting politics for good and no doubt gratefully. The lightning conductor had gone and the Protestant masses found new leaders, their own kind.

It is hard to exaggerate the importance of this development for Ulster. The old Unionist leaders disliked Irish nationalism and wanted to keep the link with England. But like Wintour they kept up the rhetoric of Ulster unionism largely for form's sake, or for the sake of the servants and the employees, and of course their electors. They did not instinctively share the visceral separatist nationalism of the Presbetarian smallholder in County Down or County Tyrone; still less of the Belfast shipworker. They were Irish gentlemen, with friends and family on both sides of the border. What this means for the state of Street pub. It will be remembered that for some sporting purposes the United Kingdom, including Northern Ireland, and the Irish Republic are separate entities: they send two teams to the Olympics, for example. In soccer the British Isles produce one from each part of Ireland. But in rugby football the whole island, 32 counties, is represented as ever by one team. (At this moment the Zealand led by two Irishmen, a northern Protestant as manager, a southern Catholic as captain).

It was said for rhetorical effect but there are people in Belfast who know what he meant, who would agree all too vehemently. The brooding, halfconscious sense of incipient betrayal there comes from a belief that the Orange Ulsterman is not understood across the water. The belief is right. A persistent myth among green Irishmen holds that the Ulster connexion is artificially maintained because the English love their fellow Protestants so much. Little could be further from the truth. The English have always had a soft spot for the Irish - the southern Catholics, the lovable if rascally Irishman. This might be called the Flurry Knox how is it that 60 years after partition, with all the bitterness and violence, there should still be a happy, all-Ireland rugby team? "That's simple. Rugger's a middleclass game. This great change of Unionist politics is pregnant with future. In the old days the rough Orangemen believed that England and the English – and Anglo-Irish – ruling class would stand by him. There is an Orange song, "The Murder of McBriar" in which the Catholics who have killed an innocent old Protestant are warned of the revenge that will be taken when we come marching "with nobles at our head". The nobles have gone. Now the Protestant workers of Ulster are on their own, farther away from England – and farther from Dr Garret FitzGerald's "peacefully united Ireland" than ever.

don't mean Mrs Thatcher's)". Mirror allows opposing points of Throughout the election campaign the Sunday Mirror has not wavered in its support for Labour and - a landslide could "unleash the forces of illiberalism lying not far beneath the surface of modern conservatism". It added: "This may sound like a recommendation to indulge in remarkable feat, this - it has not once given itself a hernia by straining its arguments to breaking point, although it came close to it a few weeks ago when it defended Mr Foot's fitness for office by saying he eats everything put in front of

> The balance of the Sunday Mirror's campaign coverage has been helped considerably by the enlistment of Roy Hattersley as a guest columnist for the duration of the election, putting the opposite point of view to the paper's resident, pro-Thatcher columnist Woodrow Wyatt, always provocative and readable but a liability at election times for a left-wing newspaper. Mr Wyatt's column yesterday carried the journalistic equivalent of a government health warning "Un-like the Tory papers, the Sunday view in its columns. For the Sunday Mirror's own views about the Election, see page 2".

Recognizing that most of its readers are probably bored to death by the election, the Sunday Mirror thought up an ingenious way to put over its message. It devised on its centre pages a general election quiz consisting of 24 statements which the reader had to tick as being either true or false. (Sample: Output per worker in manufacturing is now only 5 per cent higher than when the Tories came to power. In the previous four years under Labour it was up by more than 14 per cent). It's reassuring to know that at least one Fleet Street paper has been able to show Saatchis the way home in ciever propaganda.

Once again another Norman Mailer essay on the election published in the Mail on Sunday turned out to be a damp squib, his description of himself throughout as "our poor American" conflicting with reports of the fee he is receiving. One phrase he used yesterday to describe the Prime Minister - "she hovered on vertiginous heights of aplomb" - will consign him directly to Pseud's Corner, I fear. I preferred the Sunday People's account of Mrs Thatcher shouting "out of frus-tration" at Denis, which was altogether more human

Both Mrs Thatcher and Mr Foot had two articles published in yesterday's papers. While the Prime Minister's pieces in the News of the World and the Sunday Express appeared to have been written by the appeared to have been written by the same person, not necessarily Mrs Thatcher, The Observer's Michael Foot had a markedly different style to the News of the World's Michael Foot. Only the News of the World provided a platform for Roy Jenkins. No Sunday paper has been willing to throw its resistant behind. willing to throw its weight behind the Alliance, The Observer having lost its nerve at the last minute after flirting with the idea for several weeks. It will be interesting to see whether The Guardian can bring itself this week to see the Alliance as anything more than a Tactical vote, or whether it, too, will sit on the

THE LOVE THAT LABOUR LOST

By the closing weekend of the the inflationary consequences of parties seem largely to have out unemployment. thrown away their manifestos in favour of a single slogan: "Stop Thatcher". That is also the message of that part of the daily and weekly press which supports either Labour or the Alliance. The Tory and Alliance campaigns will be reviewed in these columns in turn tomorrow and on Wednesday. What is it today which can explain why the Labour Party enters the last few days of campaigning in such a sorry state, when, by any normal standards, it should have started the campaign with much to commend its position? Indeed during the first week of campaigning it actually started to gain points from the Conservatives

The Labour Party started the election campaign with dry powder. No opposition party could expect a much better target than a government which had to defend three million unemployment, an economy showing only tentative evidence of recovery and a record in which only the conquest of inflation and of the Falklands were measurable successes, with the rest having to be taken on trust from a not very elequent band of ministers. A properly conducted campaign, showing some dent in the Tory should have been position, enough to reduce the danger of enfilade from the Alliance.

Labour's campaigning strategy was to concentrate on unemployment and social issues and to stay off defence, the Falklands and the Common Market. If that strategy could have been sustained, it might have been effective. Nobody could have imagined how decisively and suicidally it was to be ignored by Labour leaders themselves.

The initial emphasis on unemployment reflected the fact that voters saw it as a major problem. What Labour strategists soon discovered, however, was that the electorate did not automatically assume that Labour had the best solution. Indeed one poll revealed that 27 per cent of the unemployed intended to vote Tory. Morevover there was evidence that electors, particu- found a natural political home in larly pensioners, were nervous of a party which has for fifty years zealots.

The strategy for the second week was supposed to emphasize Labour's historic identification with the National Health Service and the whole apparatus of the welfare state. Again the party should have been able to make headway against a government which was felt to be suspect in this area; again it blew its chances in a revealing wrangle over those nuclear disagreements which it had hoped to conceal. Of course the reasons for this cumulative failure cannot be wholly attributed simply to a maladroit campaign, nor to the inexperience of those party officials in charge of its machine. The causes go back further in time and deeper into the character of the party.

The Labour Party had been living a lie; what is perhaps surprising is that the pressure of a mere three weeks' electioneering has so cruelly exposed the deceit at the core of the party's travail. That deceit springs from the change in its traditional position as a broad church to one of a narrow sect. It can be discerned from the way, even in an election, so much of the party's invective seems to be coded to apply to different wings of itself, rather than to attract the widest measure of support. The roots of this sectarian socialism can be traced to the illfated decision to lift the ban on dual membership of the Labour Party and sundry sectarian or militant groupings. That decision even condoned fraternal relationships with Communist parties of east Europe. That is when the rot set in which has now disfigured the face of the party. It has allow its activist elements to be taken over by socialists who seem to have no feeling for the millions of Labour voters. The same attitude to their members can be found among activists in the trade unions, who have so much to say in the Labour Party's counsels. There are thus far too many voters who do not share the ideology of Labour Party activists, but who have hitherto provided a wholly credible and necessary alternative government of the moderate, humane and very British left.

Throughout the campaign the decline in the Labour Party's appeal has been epitomized by the leadership of Mr Michael Foot. Yet Mr Foot has only been himself. He is living no lie. The subversion of the Party long predates his leadership, which is only a consequence of it not a cause. A different man might have achieved different things in the party before the electon. though that would have been unlikely of Mr Healey. His unworthy performance in the campaign cannot all be put down to the frustration of an able man confined to play loyal lieutenant to a less able captain.

Labour's decline springs as much from the thicket of little and large deceptions which any able mind at the top of the Labour Party has nowadays to cope with. Those deceptions and contradictions will have to be resolved before the party can hope to give encouragement to those millions of decent Labour voters who would in effect be disenfranchised without a party which could combine the intellectual economic and social strands of British social democracy all under a single leadership. That social democratic tap-root goes deep into the structure of British society, particularly in the north. It is the bedrock element in the Labour vote which will always guarantee Labour about two hundred seats in the Commons. The prospects for Labour making an early recovery from an election defeat this week do not look encouraging, unless the incoming parliamentary party, whatever its strength, manages to discard the Tribunite enthusiasms which have activated its predecessor. Somehow Labour's leaders, and Labour's activists, will have to learn a hard lesson. that there is no point in capturing power within the party if the consequence of doing so is to deprive the party of its general support in the country. That has been the narrow vision of the zealot throughout the ages, and the British people do not like

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Tactical voting and other issues in run-up to polls

ERIC CHALKER.

From Lord Gladwyn

Sir. Mr Parkinson says that a vote for the Alliance would, in effect, be a vote in favour of a Labour majority in the coming election. This is because it might result in the Conservatives losing certain mar-ginal elections. Indeed it might, thus preventing a Tory "landslide" much feared and deprecated by Mr

Francis Pym. The idea that it might also result in the loss of certain seats by the Labour Party does not seem to occur to this eminent, if amateur, psephologist. The belief that it might thus introduce a healthy third force into the rather stale arena of British politics is clearly foreign to his thought Yours faithfully, GLADWYN. House of Lords,

From Dr Rhys S. Jones

Sir, To cut through the tangled maze of issues being raised in the present election campaigns, may I suggest a simple parailel? Mrs Thatcher is sometimes portrayed as too uncompromising. So was Charles de Gaulle when he was elected president of a chaotic France in 1959. French voters realised their country needed a benevolent dictator". Six years later, at the next referendum, in 1965, he was re-elected president by popular suf-frage, as the slow and arduous task of re-stabilizing France was obviously not fully completed. A second term in office was essential for him to "finish the job". Mrs Thatcher has been Prime Minister for only four years ...

Last year the French voted for a socialist "panacea" which has already proved in practice to be economically unworkable. It had merely sounded plausible.

Are not the recent experiences of our French neighbours relevant and nelpful as we consider how to vote on June 9?

From Mr Eric Chalker

Sir, Your leader of May 31 defines a landslide as. "a great majority of votes leading to an overwhelming parliamentary victory." You do not acknowledge, however, that an overwhelming parliamentary victory can occur under our silly voting system without even a small majority - in fact, a minority. That, of course, is what usually happens.

In this particular election, the biggest vote indicated for any party so far is just over 50 per cent, for the Conservatives. Such a vote would be a majority and would itself be a fairly remarkable event, but the only "landslide" would be in seats not Votes

Of course, a government sup-ported by a majority of those voting is not to be sneezed at. It would, after all, carry an element of legitimacy not achieved by very many of their predecessors. Perhaps

Club rating relief

From Mr James Dowd Sir, With the general election

campaign well under way leaders of the main political parties and parliamentary candidates should be aware that one of the greatest threats to the rights of the British people is the intolerable burden of rates imposed on the non profit-making clubs that exist to provide a service for local communities.

Without the sports and social clubs many communities would be deprived of facilities for a huge range of sporting and leisure activities ranging over cricket, squash, rugby, tennis, bowls, darts, snooker, fishing and numerous other pursuits.

All local authorities are empowered under Section 40 of the General Rate Act 1967 to give up to 50 per cent discretionary rates relief to clubs which are "not established or conducted for profit" and are "wholly or mainly used for purposes of recreation." Yet many authorities heap full rates on the clubs, which means on the members. Some rates burdens on non-profit-

North-South divide

From Mr Nicholas Bennett

Sir, Councillor David Blunkett, the Labour leader of Sheffield City Council (May 27), puts forward the novel constitutional argument that local authorities under the control of his political party should have the right if the Conservatives are reelected to "maximum separation" from central government.

Why stop there? Surely those wards within Sheffield and other Labour controlled authorities which return Conservative councillors should have the right to cede from the council? Bearing in mind the rates that Councillor Blunkett's authority levies, this will be an extremely popular policy. Yours faithfully. NICHOLAS BENNETT.

Marriage and tax

From Mrs Jean Viall Sir, Mr David Lindsay's letter (May 25) prompts me to put to readers the view of the National Council of Women of Great Britain on the subject of marriage and tax. In December 1980 Sir Geoffrey

Howe presented a Green Paper entitled "The Taxation of Husband and Wife". One of the proposed options was to make the individual the basic unit for tax by the separate assessment and taxation of the incomes of husband and wife, with the phasing out of the married man's allowance and the wife's carned income allowance, and their replacement by a personal tax allowance for each spouse made fully transferable between them. This option is the policy of the Council and mirrors our concern for the unfavourable treatment given under present tax regulations to the married couple with only one earner. The Council first passed a resolution calling for separate taxation as long ago as 1919. Surely the time for discussion is past and action is overdue to end discrimination against the married woman who is not in paid employment. Yours faithfully,

The weight of opinion in the armed forces since 1945 has been against conscription because it involves an expensive training system producing a markedly lower level of expertise and stability in the standing forces. 'Peace for Galilee' one year later

From Lord Chelwood Sir, I hope you will allow space for this letter on June 6, one year to the day since Israel launched its "peace for Galilee" operation. An estimated 20,000 people, mainly civilians, died in Israel's ruthless bombardment of the towns and crities of southern Lebanon, and at least 50,000 were maimed.

For what? A year later it is clear that, far from improving the chances of peace in Lebanon or in the Middle East as a whole, Israel's invasion and continued occupation not only fuel more civil strife but could well provoke another full scale civil war, this time with the added risk of superpower confrontation. Only America can persuade Israel that it is in her best interests to abide by the law and cooperate in the latest efforts to reach a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute, and bring home the cost of

Rampant rape

House of Lords,

From Mr Alan Mattingly Sir, Your leading article on the mixed blessing of the oilseed rape "explosion" (May 30) will have struck a chord with many walkers horse-riders and cyclists who are now finding hundreds of their footpaths and bridleways disappearing beneath this tall, yellow crop.

According to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, farmers are prohibited from disturbing the surface of paths that follow the edges of fields and are required to restore after ploughing those rights of way that cross fields. Unfortunately, these laws are about as effective as those which make the dropping of litter an offence, with the result that crops are too often grown across public paths (all of which are highways in law). Oilseed rape grows very quickly and becomes impossible to penetrate. Path users are left with the options of retracing their steps or of looking for an alternative route which may cause them to trespass and even do unintentional damage to other crops. This is in nobody's interests, and the solution lies in the hands of local authorities who have powers to restore themselves the line ploughed-up rights of way and to charge the costs to the offending farmer. Yours sincerely. ALAN MATTINGLY, Secretary. The Ramblers' Association, 1/5 Wandsworth Road, SW8.

From Mr E. J. Lee Sir. During the course of the interview with Anthony Smith, Director of the British Film Institute, which was the subject of an article in The Times dated May 11. 1983. he is reported as saying that a source of income for a new fund to finance film production would be the existing Eady levy. This is a view which is strongly contested by all sections of the British cinema exhibition industry. It had some economic and equitable justification when the cinema was the only user of films. That situation changed fundamentally with the advent of widespread national television broadcasting which was followed by video cassettes and discs and is due to be followed by cable and satellites, all of which use feature films made and paid for by the cinema, as a major part of their programming. They also rely heavily on the promotional value of the cinema as a "shop window" for those films.

The cinema now finds itself in the uniquely unfavourable position of being subject to a selective charge on its box office receipts which is then used directly to fund material for its competitors. This situation cannot possibly be justified and the levy must be totally and immediately removed before it causes final and irrevocable damage to cinemas in this country.

Whitehall talks From Mr Philip Goldenberg, Liberal/SDP Alliance candidate for Woking

Sir, it is hardly surprising that, as Mr Peter Hennessey reports today (May 31), opposition parties, invited upon the announcement of a general election to engage in discussions with senior civil servants, have other more immediate priorities. The real lesson is that such invitations should be extended made a quasi-formal oral approach to the chairman of the Board of Revenue indicating the Inland Liberal Party's wish for such discussions in relation to the departmental restructuring which would, in our view, be necessary in the context of our proposals for credit taxation. The reply was that such discussions could not take place without the approval of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and that it was extremely unlikely that he would give his consent. The problems that have arisen on this occasion because of a snap election highlight the need for an agreed convention whereby senior civil servants can, without seeking specific ministerial consent, engage in regular and constructive dialogue with opposition parties on major issues, particularly as they affect the Civil Service. This would be beneficial to the Civil Service and to price of more than £100,000 is expected for a volume containing Albrecht Durer's three major series of woodcuts when it is offered at Sotheby's on June 17. The 48 prints which make up The Life of the Virgin, The Large Passion and The Apocalypse are all in the Latin edition of 1511 and are in generally good condition.

However, these facts alone would not account for such a price. There are also, for instance, single woodcuts from the first two series in the same sale, which carry estimates of up to £1,500 each. What gives the volume its special importance is the splendid gold-stamped vellum binding.

This dates from the last third of the sixteenth century, which is rare enough, and it is stamped with the insignia of the Stadtbibliothek Nuremberg, which includes the coats of arms of the City of Nuremberg and of the Imhoff family, which endowed the library.

Durer was the son of a Nuremberg goldsmith, and he lived in the city for much of his life. The Apocalypse of 1498 was one of the first great works which he executed after returning from his first visit to Italy and it is a mixture of Gothic and Renaissance themes and style. This volume may well have been Imhoff's own.

The records of the Stadtbibliothek are incomplete, but the volume appears to have been removed during the Napoleonic Wars by the French general, Andreossi. Its subsequent history is unknown, and Sotheby's are able to say only that it comes from a European

The authorities at the Stadtbibliothek are anxious that the volume, with its associations with one of Nuremberg's greatest citizens, should return to them. Top executives of virtually every brewing company in Europe are attending the 19th International Congress of the European Brewery Convention which opens today at London's Royal Festival Hall sector. Britain's brewing industry has been through three difficult years, even though profits have held up remarkably well. There could now be a new turn of events. A big investment programme to make pubs more attractive is one factor as the brewers counter the attractions of other leisure interests.

The Brewers' Society expect sales to sabilise this year at 1982 levels, with a rise of about 0.5 per cent next year. The unpredictable factor is the weather this summer. The spring is likely to have hit sales. Another question mark is the outcome of the General Election. A Labour win could result in price controls and the trend in brewers' profitability could

How far proposed European Commission regulations will change the present system by which brewers sell wines, spirits and soft drinks to their tenanted pubs remains to be seen. The threat would be even more pronounced were the regulations to overturn existing profit sharing arrangements in the extensive takings from prize-giving fruit machines.

The EEC regulations have implications for brewers on the Continent - but that is one European issue which will not be ventilated at the European Brewery Convention's (EBC) biennial Congress which, for the first time in 32 years, is being held in London this week.

The EBC coordinates scientific cooperation in the brewing and the malting industries. Yesterday's opening ceremonies, beginning with an across-London parade of a score of dray horse teams from British breweries, are being followed by a series of working sessions and technical visits throughout this

At the congress, organized by the Institute of Brewing, a wide range of research topics will be explored. These include product safety problems such as those posed by crop pesticides and nitrogenous elements in water from fertilisers.

There are also new developments in genetic engineering to develop new yeast strains,

For consumers, some of the research work could mean improved products. For the browers, there could be cost benefits, if only in the longer

It is immediate difficulties are preoccupying the British brewing industry, but there are now better omens.

Beer sales, estimated by Mintel at £6,800m last year, accounts for over half of the total drinks market of £11,750m. This was virtually the same as the year before, price rises having been counter-balanced by the fall in sales volumes and an increasing switch to off-licence sales, including the supermarkets.

Beer sales have declined 12 per cent since the neak year of 1979, though in the first quarter of this year production at 8.3m bulk barrels was 0.5 per cent up on the same quarter of last year.

Only a slight improvement, but mainly by way of loans, the Brewers' Society described it Brewers' spending there will as a good sign.

It could be an indication of a years new trend, even if bad summer weather reverses it temporarily. The longer-term problems facing the brewers include the effects of recession, particularly high unemployment. This is a special problem for small localised breweries.

Another problem is how to attract customers whose drinking habits have been changing. A recent Mintel survey of the alcoholic drinks market showed there is less heavy drinking, partly because of the breathalyser. Drinking is now likely to be

Greater support for the retail trade

The brewers' new investment plans are aimed at coming to terms with these difficulties. Over and above regular expenditure on maintenance and decoration Britain's 80 brewers are now committed to spending £850m on the 49,000 pubs which they own in the three years to the end of 1985.

Overall support for retailing activities will be £1,180m, 75 per cent of brewers' total capital investment planned over the three years. It is a big change from the 46 per cent spent on the retailing side in the late 1970s when the brewers were building up their production capacity and distribution sys-

Free-house pubs, independent of the brewers, and clubs

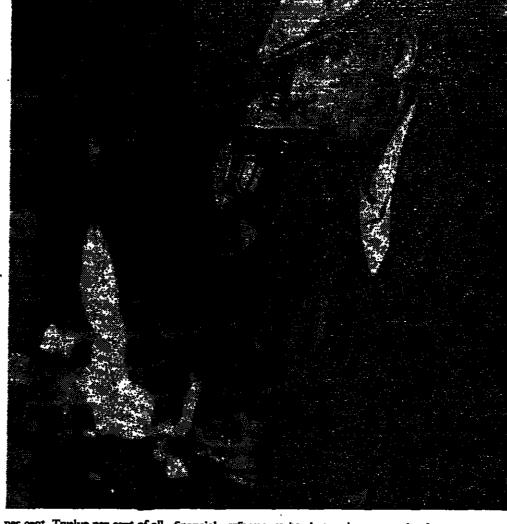

This scale of investment on the retailing side has led Mr Charles Tidbury, chairman of the Brewers' Society (and also chairman of Whitbread), to describe 1983 as likely to be a landmark year for the pubs. He said: "better amenities, brighter decor, tastier grub, slicker service, more efficient cellars whatever it is the locals want the local is where they will find

He added: "By setting out deliberately to attract a bigger share of our trade back into pubs we are helping ensure the future prosperity of thousands of small businesses."

The brewers as a group are also resuming national advertising. The £1m promotion, whose punch line is "You should've been in the pub last night", employs mainly poster sites and radio advertising.

Advertising expenditure on beer by individual companies has also rocketed Industry nas also rocketed. Industry estimates suggest that in the first quarter of this year media advertising of beer of all kinds grew by 53 per cent on annual comparison to nearly £13.5m. Although advertising on lager has risen to nearly £5m, that is still only an 11 per cent increase. The overall figure has been swollen by Guinness's big promotion on its "Guinnless"

Apart from the decline in overall beer sales, there is also the continuing swing to off-licence purchases, mostly for home consumption. Ten years ago, off-licences accounted for 20 per cent of all alcohol sales; will get their share of support, now the proportion is over 28 per cent. Twelve per cent of all beer sales are made in offlicences, mainly supermarkets.

Up to a point the bigger role played by supermarkets has increased sales for the brewers, though the profit margins are often much slimmer in this part of the take-home trade.

The rate of increase in lager sales had been easing but statistics due out soon are likely to show that lager now accounts for 33 per cent of the overall beer market, up from 31 per

The problem could be that the increase here has come largely from higher sales of cheaper lagers and mostly through the supermarkets rather than other outlets where lager's premium price (and thus better profit margins) has been most

Brighter pubs to pull in the quaffers

To Britain's major brewers the attempts made in recent years by the "real ale" campaigners to educate the public beer drinking tastes have at best been minor irritations. Far more potent in affecting ouput and profits has been the recession and the burden of the beer tax.

According to the Brewers' Society, the market for cask conditioned beer - about 16-17 per cent of total beer sales in the United Kingdom - has re-mained relatively unchanged for 20 years. But the impact of national ecomomic change has bee widespread.

Last year, beer production in the UK was 36,531,896 bulk barrels, down 3.1 per ent on the 1981 figure and the lowest annual output since 1972. Brewers made an average of 28.8m pints a day compared with 29.7m pints a day in 1981 and 31m pints in 1980 and 32.5m pints in 1979.

The society, which represents almost the entire brewing industry, made no reference, in commenting on 1982's poor performance, of the impact of competitive beverages or of any change in drinking habits.

It said: "For the third consecutive year, beer pro-duction has fallen and 1982's output was 11-12 per cent below the peak calendar year of 1979. This reflects the high level of umemployment, particularly in heavy industrial areas, and the continuing economic recession.

"These factors inhibit our customers' spending. fourth quarter figures indicate that the underlying trend still remains downwards but at a somewhat slower ate. There are signs that the trade could level out in 1983, especially if there is respite from the excessive beer tax burdens imposed in recent

However, some observers of the brewing scene are not which traditional pub premises conviced that the industry has have been turned to a wide been that badly hit by economic variety of eat-and-drink spots gloom. Dun & Bradstreet, the business statistics company, with bars serving French food said in a report in April that the to a singles bar serving Mexican results of a random sample of both large and small brewers showed that few appear to have been financially vulnerable

during the three years to the end

"In 1979 and 1980 the analysis indicates that about 94 per cent of companies showed signs of being completely solvent with 6 per cent slightly vulnerable and in 1981 all companies appeared to be

It added: "The brewing industry often complains that it has felt the effects of recession over the past few years, but this analysis indicates that it has held up remarkably well. This may be a reflection that the brewers' profits are now derived less from the production of beer and more from the sale of food and other beverages.

There are seven major brewers in the UK which together account for three-quarters of the nation's output. This is from a total of 78 brewing companies operating 131 breweries, and this, in turn, compares with 96 companies operating 177 brew-eries in 1970. Since 1971, about 90 very small companies have been formed and some 40 pubs

But the big seven continue to exercise the major influence on the market. They are Bass, Allied-Lyons, Whitbread. Grand Metropolitan Watney, Courage, Scottish & Newcastle and Guinness, Not far behind are Greenhall Whitley, the northern-based brewery which now brews in excess of 1m barrels a year and owns more than 1,000 pubs. It also owns the Carisberg lager brewery at Northampton, which produces more than 1m barrels a year.

Guinness and Bass are, arguably, the best known brand names. Guiness is now claimed to be the most widely available brand of beer in the country, excluding Northern Ireland, and has captured between 4 and per cent of the market by volume. Draught Guinness is on sale in more than 50,000 onlicenced outlets.

In spite of their firm grip on the market, the major brewers are involved in a massive advertising promotion, and capital investment spree costing, in the three years to 1985, a total of £1,580m.

All of them now appear to be returning to the marketing of regional beers in an attempt to persuade drinkers that breweries are making ale specifically for their area and taste.

From Holland comes rather more than 40,000 bulk barrels, and Belgium contributes about another 27,000.

Of all the European markets, the German most likely faces radical change. West Germans still drink more beer per head than any other nation and have a fierce loyalty to local brews. Nevertheless, one projection is that a quarter of the present breweries there will be swallowed in amalgamations within ten years. Competition for the German market

If the Germans lose this protection against imports, it could speed the rate of change in their fragmented industry. A surge of competition, particularly from the Dutch, Danes and British, could be expected. French beer consumption is only a quarter of Germany's and a third of Britain's, and volume sales have been shading down. More than 20 French brewers have gone out of business in the past decade, leaving 48 still operating. Of these, 27 small brewers account for only 2 per cent of the country's beer output, according to a recent Keynote Publications' survey*.

Exports are relatively unexploited, although there are notable exceptions like Kronenhourg. But with French beer drinkers becoming discerning, imports have climbed and now account for more than 11 per cent of the market.

The emphasis on quality beers, which has favoured the imports, could spark off in France a movement rather like that of real ale in Britain, says The German industry is still highly fragmented. Work your way up to a Director.

Directors Bitter is one of the strongest Draught Beers regularly produced in Britain-a distinctive malty ale appreciated by connoisseurs.

This beer was never originally meant to be consumed by the public but was produced exclusively for the directors of Courage Brewery

In 1950 the Alton Brewery in Hampshire produced two bottled beers, Alton Red which was naturally conditioned and Alton Blue, a bright version of the same brew.

The directors of Courage persuaded their head brewer to put some Alton Red in cask and it was kept strictly for their delectation.

Guests of the directors sampled the beer and spoke of its quality and a small public demand for it grew.

Eventually it was put into a few pubs under the name of Alton IPA.

But locals knew this was the beer the brewery directors drank and one publican produced his own hand written sign "Directors Bitter."

The name stuck and popularity for Directors rapidly grew, and it is now to be found throughout the South being served only through traditional beer engines or by gravity from the cask.

Industrial pollution, pollution by the farmers who grow the barley that makes the malt that makes the beer, and even the spread of nuclear power is posing a threat to the water supplied to some big breweries.

I do not suggest that brewers should move their production facilities to new water supplies, though this is not as unusual as it seems. Tolly Cobbold, the Ipswich brewery, originally brewed at Harwich and brought water downriver from Ipswich in barges which returned filled with beer. But there is a growing awareness of the need to safeguard the purity and consistency of the water.

The water which gives Burbeers their distinctive flavour is the latest to be under threat. Bass, the best-known of the three major breweries in the town, is taking urgent steps to ascertain just how serious the

While the brewers usually buy their mait from local maltsters, a more structured marketing system applies. This guarantees the brewers a definate quality and the producers a market price based on a valuation by a panel under the aegis of the Hops Marketing Board. Brewers own two thirds of these outless, at the last count amounting to 49,000. In about 14,000 of these the brewers put in mangers and that proportion has barely changed over the past 15 years.

In the same period of time the number of tenanted pubs has declined by a fifth. In the late 1960s there were about 45,000 tenanted pubs but at the last count in 1980 there were barely 35,000. The number has probably declined further since then as more pubs have been sold off by brewers to become forms of brewery contract. . Typically, under these contracts a brewer could specify to the retailer which products to sell and how to do so. The quid pro quo for the retailer was a loan usually paid off over five years while the commitment to the brewers' products might well last ten years.

The nearest approach to this in Britain are loan arrangements by the brewers with free trade outlets, including some of the independently owned pubs and especially full on-licensed which now number around 33,000.

But any agreement on taking a brewer's products operates only for the life of the loan in Britain and the pub or club normally has the option to pay off a brewer if it wants to switch to different patronage.

The unusual factor in Britain is the brewers' owning so many pub properties. In the ninete-teenth century many were acquired whose proprietors were in debt. But as bigger breweries came on the scene it was a means of ensuring to a reasonable extent a known level of demand for the breweries'

This dropping of the tie could eventually change the character of Britain's pubs, according to Mr Charles Tidbury chairman of the Brewers' Society and also chairman of Whitbread.

If the partnership between brewer and tenant, the backbone of the pub trade, were

"To run a business like ours successfully, we've found that thirty-two heads are better than one."

Douglas Strachan Managing Director. Allied Breweries Limited.

عكنا من الاحل

There are thirty-two independent operating companies within Allied Breweries.

We could have shown you the 154 beers in our portfolio. But modesty, coupled with a shortage of very long bars, prevented us.

Our management style and our product range reflect our commitment to our customers - customers who these days are more demanding and more diverse than ever before.

We're determined to get as close to them as we can. And who's better qualified to do that?

A remote board in Burton? Or local companies with roots in their own communities and with names, faces and people that are known and recognised?

The answer is obvious, isn't it.

So, five years ago, we carried out the most genuine. and the most thoroughgoing programme of devolution the brewing industry has ever seen.

Has it worked in practice?

Are we really giving the customers back what they always wanted?

Allow us to take you on a short pub crawl.

A few cases of cask conditioning

1 Tetley Bitter needs no introduction if you hail from the north. It's the largest ale brand within Allied Breweries and easily the brand leader in the North East and North West.

And now that more and more pubs are serving it in the traditional form-through handpumps-Tetley Bitter is going from strength to strength.

2. Peter Walker was a Liverpool brewery that was acquired by Tetleys in the early sixties. The name disappeared from the scene, as names had a habit of doing in those days.

Now, once again, 'Peter Walker' can be found above the door of 67 pubs that offer traditional pub values and traditionally brewed cask conditioned ales. The results have proved nothing short of outstanding.

Peter Walker's return has been warmly welcomed by the people of Lancashire and Cheshire."

A little bit of local identity and pedigree has been faithfully restored.

3. Ind Coope used to be run as one single business. covering the whole of the south.

Bearing in mind that beer drinkers' tastes in King's Lynn were never going to match those in Truro. Ind Coope set out to restore local managements, each responsible for their own market.

So it was in 1979 that some famous old names like Benskins, Taylor Walker and Friary Meux returned. So, too, did Halls Oxford & West Brewery Co.,

now independent of Ind Coope, to quench the thirsts of the West Country. These companies offer their own individual traditional draught beers, and pubs which once again look and feel like pubs

As a result, Ind Coope has been transformed: confidence and profits are surging ahead.

4. Ansells Mild and Bitter have been household names in the Midlands for over a hundred years. Indeed, Ansells' drinkers will tell you that they're unbeatable. The judges in the Great Western Beer Festival obviously agree.

Because when they adjudicated the caskconditioned beers, Ansells Mild took first prize for Mild in 1981 and 1982, while Ansells Bitter took first prize for Bitter in 1982.

Will anyone still swallow keg beers? You might suppose that traditional draught ales have elbowed out keg beers. Until you look at the success of John Bull. We brewed it to succeed a long line of quality beers.

for drinkers looking for a consistent, reliable pint. Launched in 1980 by the Romford Brewery Co., its sales have exceeded our best expectations. Available in more than 30,000 outlets. John Bull is doubling the sales of the product it replaced.

Meanwhile, north of the border, the Alloa Brewery has scored a major success with Diamond Export and Diamond Heavy.

Obviously, our keg beers still have a lot to offer.

Lager. Quality no matter what the gravity. Brewing lagers to a consistently high standard right across the gravity range is a daunting brief.

But not for the Wrexham Lager Beer Company. As the oldest lager brewery in the U.K. (it celebrated its centenary in 1982) it has an unrivalled depth of experience and skill.

Which goes a long way to explaining why their lagers' praises have been sung in recent lager competitions.

At Brewex '83 it won first prize in the U.K. draught lager class for products between 1030° and 1037° with Wrexham Draught Lager.

In the UK draught lager class for products between 1038° and 1043° it gained second prize with draught Lowenbrau

And in the international bottled lagers competition. for lagers between 1044° and 1056,° with a field of 64 entrants from all over the world, the brewery gained second prize with Skol Special Strength.

National brands. Aren't they having a flat time of it?

Quite the contrary.

Long Life, our renowned brand leader in England and Wales, has increased its market share in the packaged light, pale and export market.

(No mean achievement when you consider the competition in the premium quality sector.)

Skol remains Allied Breweries' biggest brand having consolidated its position as the best known lager in the UK and one of the most famous beer brands in

And bearing in mind the trend towards the low gravity products in the lager market, we're delighted with the rise and rise of our premium quality Lowenbrau range:

As Lowenbrau's UK agents, we can proudly say that it's brewed to the Reinheitsgebot - the strict system of quality control exercised in Germany.

And we can proudly add that there's a handsome increase in Lowenbrau sales since last year.

A flat time of things? Not for our brands at any rate.

Are our 'take-home' beers being taken home? In one of the fastest-growing sectors of the market we're delighted to report that we have the fastestgrowing company.

Namely, Allied Breweries Take Home Limited. Within the last year it has achieved market leadership in England and Wales.

The Oranjeboom boom.

As you've seen, reintroducing well-loved brews to their former markets has been a particularly successful policy of ours in Britain.

But it's also met with success abroad, too.

You only have to consider the story of Oranjeboom. When we acquired the Oranjeboom brewery in Rotterdam in 1968, Oranjeboom had been withdrawn from the Dutch market and retained merely for sales

But when we relaunched it a few months ago, such was the surge of demand from hundreds of local licensees. that they formed queues outside the brewery's order office.

The return of the satisfied customer. We hope you've enjoyed our rather circuitous

We hope you have the chance to sample a good few of the brews we've passed along the way.

We hope, too, you'll find evidence to support our claim that we are closer than ever before to the heartbeat of our customers.

Close enough, literally, to overhear their requests at the bar.

Be it for traditional beers, conviviality, food or entertainment

We're immensely proud of what we've achieved. Quite clearly our policy is the right one.

Because last year, when beer consumption went down, guess what happened?

Allied sales went up.

COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL

The group has been hit hard by overcapacity in the North American newsprint market.
This led to a $30-a-tonne cut in the price of newsprint last November. Though the group's newspaper interests - Reed owns the Daily Mirror should show a good increase in profits and other publishing activities show continued strength, packaging activities are likely to show a severe downturn.

There is clearly going to be significant recovery in Reed's profits during the current year but this may not show through strongly until the second half.

Chief interest in the City.

Sterling's sharp drop on Friday gave the markets a bit of a fright but the underlying sentiments remain strongly in favour of the pound and most analysts expect it to continue strong next week and after the seemingly inevitable Conservative victory.

Nor do the statistical number of believes that money growth will again be overly-rapid, pushing the aggregates further above target and pointing to some tightening of policy after the election. The other believes the April surge was due to a one-off government spending spree and that the May figures will show signs of slowdown.

Also out tomorrow are the wholesale price indices for May, which will provide a useful indication later this way. profits during the current year but this may not show through strongly until the second half.

Pilkington Brothers, whose pretax profits were 30 per cent particular by the Labour Party 10 see how much money has been flowing out of Britian into overseas stocks and shares, one of the political issues of the day. On election day itself Thursday, central government borrowing figure for May is published. This will again be of principal interest to the City, that government spending has subsided in line with plans.

Also out on Thursday are provisional figures for car production in May, followed on Friday by May useable steel production and the lates monthly figures from the building societies.

Half-year figures from Comet, the electrical goods retailer, on Thursday are also going to be good. The persistence of the consumer spending boom has led analysts to repeatedly revise their forecasts to a doubling of pretax profits to £8m or £9m excluding property surpluses.

This would point to full-year figures of perhaps £13m or more against £7.4m last time. To some extent this will reflect a recovery from the losses of diversified businesses, such as jeweiry.

The week also sees full-year figures from Martin the Newsagent today and the 600 Group on Thursday.

DoT denies Trafalgar report

The Department of Trade has denied reports that it had approved the takeover of P & O by Trafalgar House, subject to certain conditions. No such assurance was given, nor could it be given, the DoT said.

The decision on whether the bid could or should be referred to the Monopolies Commission would be taken by the Secretary of State for Trade only after he had considered the advice of Sir Gordon Borrie, director general of fair trading Sir Gordon has not yet tendered his advice, and is not expected to do so for some days, the DoT said.

The institutions have been pleasantly surprised by the vigour of the Tilling defence, and its forecast of profits of £95m for 1983 against £43.7m last year. This has prompted Fielding Newson Smith, the stockbrokers, to produce a study suggesting that the group should make £122.5m pretax in launch in mid-1985.

The reason they wish to turn down the extra £4m will no doubt be explained by the Fitch directors to their shareholders before the latter are asked to vote on the issue on Friday though the not always veiled threat by Linfood to bid for the whole company if it could not have Key Markets perhaps had something to do with it.

Less easy to explain is the length to which Fitch Lovell has gone to try to keep Safeway at arms length in recent weeks having so warmly welcomed the company when it made its first, much lower bid for Key Markets.

It was only yesterday, for example, that Fitch Lovell supplied Safeway with its shreholder register virtually the last possible moment - and this makes it almost impossible for Safeway to write to Fitch Lovell shareholders to tell them of the existance of their higher offer, and have a hope of influencing them and their proxy votes.

There are perhaps good reasons for the delay. But it still seems odd to ask shareholders to vote on a deal of this magnitude, which involves an effective auction between two powerful adversaries, without giving all sides the right and opportunity to talk direct to the voters.

A Conservative victory at the polls would be unlikely produce a sharp change in the country's economic fortunes over the next three or four years, according to a batch of forecasts published over the weekend.

The forecasts indicate that nemployment would remain almost unchanged from the present 3.2 million, growth that would stay relatively slow, and that the Government could find itself increasingly restricted by budgetary and balance of payments difficulties, which balance of might lead to alterations to the medium term financial strategy.

The London Business School, whence came Dr Terry Burns. the Treasury's chief economic adviser, forecasts that the successful implementation of the Conservative manifesto would cut the jobless total by 200,000 by 1986. The average annual growth rate of gross domestic product over the same period would be 2.4 per cent.

But inflation, the business school says, would have fallen too 4.0 per cent a year, compared with an estimated 5.2 per cent for this year. Meanwhile, the public sector borrowing requirements would fall

All the forecasts agree that expansion in the medium term will be financed largely by consumer spending rather that investment. But, depending on the exchange rate, this could suck in imports. Even on the business school assumptions about successful Conservative policies, import penetration would go up from 36.9 per cent this year to 38.6 per cent in

British goods mean British jobs

"There is a worldwide demand for goods of high quality and value and there is no reason why they should not be made in Britain. Increased demand for British goods means more British jobs. If British leadership is determined, we can produce in Britain goods of high quality and value which today are often imported" LORD SIEFF, Chairman.

SUPPORT FOR BRITISH INDUSTRY

- Over 90% of our clothing, home furnishings and foodstuffs that can be grown or processed in temperate climates are produced in Britain. We buy from abroad only when we cannot find innovation, high quality and value at home.
- Many Marks & Spencer suppliers have invested heavily in modern technology. They have further increased productivity, and the quality and value of their goods.
- More than 170,000 people in the U.K. today are employed making, distributing and selling St Michael goods.
- We are served by suppliers who are among the best in the world. Many have operated in partnership with Marks & Spencer for many years, sharing a common objective to satisfy our customers.

LANGS: HAR WESCH Calc. Mark Calc.

TRADING HIGHLIGHTS

- We opened 316,000 sq.ft. of new selling space worldwide. This included 200,000 sq.ft. in the U.K., where we invested £100 million in building, fixtures
- Between March 1982 and March 1983, the prices of our general merchandise increased by 1.5% and
- our foods by 2.3%. We increased volume sales as a result of improved quality and values.
- Total exports from the U.K. to our overseas customers and our stores in Europe and Canada amounted to £67.9 million.

Sun shines on the 11 survivors from the winter of discontent

By John Woodcock Cricket Correspondent

Of the 14 players chosen to make up the England party for the Prudential World Cup. starting on Thursday, all but three - Allott, Dilley and Gatting - were in Australia last winter. In view of England's record on that tour, any fewer changes would have been unacceptable.

What the selectors must be hoping is that the advantages of playing in England will make all the difference to an unsuccess-ful side. It is also true, of course. that the cupboard is pretty bare.
"We talked about everyone", said a selector. Among those he was referring to were Athey, Bairstow, Pocock, Pringle, Stovold. Taylor and Thomas.

In the first match, against New Zealand at The Oval, Randall, Jesty and Cowans will be the three left out. Tavare will open with Fowler, with Gower at No 3, and Gatting as the sixth bowler. In case of injury to one of the other five, a spare bowler needs to be included, which, when it is not Gatting, will have to be Jesty. Randall is the alternative choice to Fowler, Tavest Corpus and Lamb and Spinial to Spini Tavaré, Gower and Lamb, and Cowans to Allott and Dilley.

Marks owes his selection, ahead of Miller, Hemmings and Pocock, to the fact that he seems at his most effective in this type of cricket. In the oneday matches in Australia, the likes of Hookes and Border were unsure of what to make of it when Marks threw the ball well up. Richards, for West Indies, and Majid Khan, for

Of the England team who lost the 1979 final to West Indies, Botham, Gower, Ran-dall and Willis reappear. How far England get this time made depend on the form of Botham, but that has been the case, and not only in one-day cricket, for the last four or five years.

Middlesex's luck held firm on Saturday when the draw was made for the semi-finals of the Benson and Hedges Cup, John Woodcock writes. Having won the toss on Friday, to beat Gloucestershire – anything, surely, would have been preferable to this – they now find themselves with the added bonus of a home tie against Lancashire. In a draw monopolized by the Home Counties, Kent will play Essex

It is the only one-day competition Middlesex have not yet won, so they could be forgiven for thinking that their turn may have come. Lancashire, had a convincing win over Northamptonshire last week, Kent and Essex are always good for a hard match. Three times winners of the competition, Kent winners of the competition, kent have a better record in it than any other county. With a side consisting, more often than not, of 11 homebred players, and under the captaincy of Tavare, they are emerging again as one of the most interesting sides in English cricket. ng sides in English cricket.

Bugner says he will carry on From Christopher Thomas,

Atlantic City

It was a good weekend for the Fraziers. In earlier bouts in Atlantic City Marvis's younger brother, Hector, won a junior welterweight bout and his cousin Rodney Frazier, beat Josh Bryant with a second round knockout in a heavymicht. round knockout in a heavyweight contest.

Bugner, weighing in at 237lb against Frazier's 201lb, was put under pressure from the outset and was obviously pacing himself against the younger man. The disparity between the judges' decisions was striking. Each gave the contest to Fazier at 6-4, 8-2, and 10-0. Bugner said: "I wonder if they were at the same fight. If you are talking about good clean punches—forget the aggression—I think I scored. The decision was all screwed up."

He thought his opponent would become a good loser but that he should be a cruiserweight. Frazier insisted that since he had won all 10 of his professional contests as a heavyweight he was happy to take on the bigger man, adding that "in time my body will mature and get some good solid extra weight."

Joe Frazier, meanwhile, said of his old rivat: "He can still fight. He gave Marvis 10 good rounds. Marvis took some body shots that would have knocked the average young boy down. Bugner didn't have sany respect for Marvis going into the fight but he got plenty respect when he realized that Marvis could hit."

The young Frazier happily

Marvis could hit."

The young Frazier happily acknowledged Bugner's assertion that "he's not as good as his father who is a living legend." Casting an who is a living legend." Casting an eye across a crowded press conference where Joe Frazier was lounging silently against a wall, he said: "My pop) is my master. When I get the championship I can say I am as good as he was but until then I am just in the background."

Good news for Holton

Mark Holton, the high hurdler form Wolverhampton, showed signs that he is winning his fight for fitness during the GRE British League second round match at Cosford yesterday.

Holton is one of several athlet to have suffered early-season injuries. But the United Kingdon record holder won the 110 metres hurdles in 14.1sec to equal the league's best time. It is the fastest performance this season in Britain. Holton, recovering form a knee injury, finished two metres ahead of wilbert Greeves of Haringey.

hard to think of anyone who has shown more eagerness than he did at Turnberry on Saturday. His defeat of an experienced rival American Walker Cup player, Jim Holtgrieve, aged 35, by five and four was the climax to a memorable formight for him and he was not ashamed to show his delight.

That same eagerness had sustained him through an arduous week of rough weather, the coldness of which severely tried the strong American entry. Parkin seems to enjoy even the weather, or rather to ignore it for he never bothered to Parkin's victory had the ring of conviction. He had led the qualifying by two stroles, then on the giant Alisa course that yielded only five birdies between the two of them throughout the final, Parkin was 74 for the morning round and level par in the afternoon. He immediate after-glow of a championship victory is not the time to plan the future, but there is no doubt that Parkin would like, if he can, to take advantage of the can, to take advantage of the chances offered by amateur golf in the next year or so: a trip to the Masters at Augusta, to Hongkong for the Eisenhower Trophy, and in 1985 a chance to meet the Americans again on their home aggressive start after lunch changed all that.

Neither drove specially well but Holtgrieve's tee shots proved more destructive. Parkin played a number of stroke-saving shots round the

Cudmore moves back on the map

By John Nicholls Harold Cudmore achieved his first sgnificant win since resigning from the Victory America's Cap syndicate, when he sailed the Irish yacht Justine in the Seine Bay Race, which ended at Gosport yesterday. The race, organised by the Royal Ocean Racing Club, was used as one of a series of trials for the selection of teams for the Admiral's Cup later in the season. The Irish and French. as well as the British, nominated the race as a trial for their potential race as a trial for their potential teams. Of the British candidates, Dragon (Brian Saffery-Cooper) had the best corrected time, followed by Whiriwind (Noel Lister) and Black Top (David Atkinson). time is wasted by Lions

From Don Cameron,

New Zealand British Lions.

The grizzled old lion of British rugby roared mightly, but still failed to make the decisive bite as the All-Blacks stole away the first inter-national 16-12 on a soft and slowpaced Lancaster Park on Saturday.

This represented a marvellous transformation by the Lions. The cost of many drab colours ill-finisgly worn for the last weeks, turned into a well-knit, total effort. Sadly for them, they could not put on the cleak of show he taking a sady for them, they could not put on the closk of glory by taking a victory which would have uplifted the Lions and very likely turned New Zealand rugby upside down.

It was a close-run thing, with the Lions 9-6 ahead at half-time, by courtesy of Ollie Campbell's boot. The All-Blacks drew level and then tel 13-9 form the new terms of the led 13-9 from the one try of the match. They were only 13-12 and hanging on for dear life until two hanging on for dear life until two minutes from the end when Hewson lobbed over a 40-metre dropped goal which gave New Zealand precious breathing space as the last seconds ticked by.

The closeness of the scores guaranteed thrills, excitement and agony for the crowd of 44,000 on a received winter's afternoon. But the

had the Lions taken a try and conversion they would have taken command of the match. But the Lions did not score the crucial my and all they could acquire, after 15 minutes of control, was a penalty goal to Campbell. So, the All-Blacks reached half-time still in touch at 6.0 and in the 65% for touch at 6-9, and in the fifty-first and fifty-sixth minutes found a penalty goal from Hewson and a rather formitous try by Mark Shaw, the flanker.

Fate was not kind to the Lions.

Poker began the break to the left by Wilson by a pass flat, but not forward. Dunn carried on the thrust, the ball went loose, shuttled this way and that, and ended in Shaw's way and that and ender in Snaw's

They started well, with the forwards competitive and skilled in the lineout and loose where they were supposed to be suspect. The backs moved well, with Campbell the midfield maestro. Not long after half-time, Andy Dalton called for his backs to move the ball wide, and was immediately rewarded with the long build-up to Shaw's try. Loveridge was as serviceable as ever, but Dunn, his partner, was shaky, and the All-Blacks owed much to Taylor's tackling of Irwin

Even at the death, befor Hewson's long dropped goal for a four-point lead, the Lions had their chances. Campbell dropped for goal and slipped. Eaton puts American pedal in circulation

By John Wilcockson

By winning the 25th Milk Race, which finished in Blackpool on Saturday, Matt Eston confirmed the growing structure of American cycling in the world arena. On the final stage of 65 miles across the Pennines, the six members of the lighted Strates and the structure and the United States team rode themselves to a standstill in defence of the cellow jersey that Eaton slipped on for the first time before the start in Bradford.

One of the danger points for Eaton was the zig-zag climb of Blackshaw Head, at Hebden Bridge. Here, the crowd - one of the largest to watch the race for many years -saw Eaton pedal up the one in four hill with great assurance, always among the first 12 riders. His colleagues, Andrew Hampsten, matched the pace of Palov from Czechoslovakia to take the special prize at the summit. Also in front were, the race's leading climber, Ludek Styds of Czechoslovakia, Tony Doyle, the British pro-fessional, and Jeff Williams, the British amateur champion. The five leaders' diverse team interests meant that the whole field regrouped by Buraley, and re-mained together until the dying miles of the stage. Several lone attacks were made, with the final one, less than a mile from home, giving Per Sandahl of Denmark his second stage win of the race. Malcohn Ellion, the winner of a record number of six stages, was second place. His third place overall was the best by a British amateur for five years. With better guidance and winning breaks, unlike the two men who finished above him, Eaton, aged 22, and the Swede Stefan Brykt, aged 18. ton admitted that he was lucky winner, but he deserves cred for infiltrating the winning moves on the first, third and fifth stages to Bristol, Welwyn Garden City and Leicester, respectively. He learnt his racing in the United States, although he was born at lifterd and held a British passport until three years

Nothing, can compensate them fully for Troy's premature death, but Sun Princess's victory was a nice tonic for them.

Apparently, Sun Princess has a nice two-year-old half-sister to Troy in training with Ian Balding, whose value must have increased tremendously overnight. By English Prince, a Petingo horse who won the Irish Derby, but subsequently exported too hastily from Ireland to Japan, out of a mare whose be the best of the three, because sire won the French Derby, Sun getting out of here," Carson said

Willie Carson looks round for non-existent dangers to Sun Princess in the Oaks.

Princess boasts a pedigree which has a mile and a half written all over it. The exciting aspect of her breeding is that he has such speed, too. It will be interesting to see whether her connexions opt for the Irish Oaks next, or bether they wait for a tilt at the King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes at Although Dahlia won the two in 1973, the odds must be against Sun Princess contesting both races as they are ony a week apart. It would not surprise me to see her go for the Irish Oaks and then be trained for the St Leger, thus following in Dunfermline's footsteps. The speed to which Carson constantly referred to was apparent when Sun Princess passed threequarters of the field in a dramatic burst riding down Tattenham Hill on the outside. The move was prompted by some jostling at the top of the hill. To hell with this, I'm to himself after Fields of Spring dropped back suddenly into the French filly Alexandrie, causing a chain reaction. Alexandrie was the chief sufferer, because she was knocked into the rails. Freddie Head, her rider, came back with paint on his boots, but most sportingly he did not complain that that was the reason for his filly's inept performance.

RACING: CLEAR-CUT CLASSIC VICTORIES AT EPSOM AND CHANTILLY

Seeing Head in trouble, Carson, who was just behind, immediately took evasive action, and eased to the outside. Giving Sun Princess a little rein, they passed horse after horse down Tattenham Hill, and suddenly found themselves more or less in front as they straightened for home.

From then on, it was a procession with Sun Princess dreawing further and further ahead. "She must be bloody good," a colleague remarked in the aftermath - "she is bloody good," Bruce Hobbs retorted as he reflected somewhat ruefully the crashing defeat that Sun

Princess has just inflicted on Acclimatise, the good filly that Cup. Thursday's and Friday's he trains. By finishing second cards are tame beyond belief, Acclimatise became the 11th horse that Hobbs has had circumstances I will not be placed in an English classic.

Royal Heroine and Ski Sailing had nothing to celebrate. Royal Heroine ran out of stamina halfway up the straight, while Ski Sailing totally failed to handle the gradients and bends. Earlier in the day, Nophe had shown blinding speed on her racecourse debut to win the Acorn Stakes. She must be a live hope for the Queen Mary Stakes at Royal Ascot.

Finally, my parting comment on this the latest classic meeting at Epsom must be that the feelings is running high that Epsom, with its prize money geared to its present level, is unable to sustain interest over four days. The feeling has racing community that with the

In the surprised if the powers that be New Coins finishing third within United Racecourse, who controls Epsom, Sandown and Kempton, consider reducing the meeting to three days. Caerleon comfortably holds L'Emigrant

Chantilly yesterday when Pat Eddery brough Caerleon to a fine victory in the Prix du Jockey Club (French Derby). Just a year ago Assert won the French classic for David O'Brien by three lengths and yesterday Cacrleon won by exactly the same distance for Vincent the same distance for vincent O'Brien. Once again it was the famour colours of Robert Sangster first past the post in the Jockey Club where the runner-up was L Emigwas ridden by Lester Piggott.
As Stavros Niarchos had shares in both the winner and runner-up, the two horses were coupled in the betting and Caerleon's win divided on the Pari-mutuel was 2.40 francs by the horses in fact started at 28-1, which was reflected in the place dividends which paid odds of just 4.1. Vincent O'Brien was unable to be at Chantilly because of the Irish air represented by Tommy Burns. The plan now for Caerleon is not exactly finalized by either he or Solford could line up for the Irish Sweep Derby on June 25 and O'Brien also has his eyes on both the Coral Eclipse Stakes and King IV and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes

Pat Eddery rode to absolute perfection and Caerieon was never further back than third position. Most of the pace was cut out by Pietra while Dom Pasquini was front of Cacrleon. With some two furlongs left to run, Eddery had an immediate reaction from Caerleon who lengthened his stride impressi vely and buit up a convincing lead as L'Emigrant was produced up the middle of the course by Cash Asmussen.

McHargue makes ground

The American jockey Darryl McHargue, the subject of a good deal of criticism from Irish racegoers since his arrival in this country, showed himself in a more flattering light at the Phoenix Park on Saturday when he got Iron Leader up close home to win the £30,000 added Kilfrush/What A Guest Stakes over a mile. Pat Eddery's mount Beaudelaire, unbeaten in his two previous starts, was the odds-on favourite to make a winning commencement to his justify his market position but in heavy ground the lack of a previous run took its toll and he was down by the persistence of the winner, whose biggest previous victory had been achieved in the Madrid Handicap at The Curragh.

three-year-old career in this contest.
For a long way he looked certain to justify his market position but in away and he made virtually all the running. After he had shaken off Fredenphil, Eddery eased him up and a late flourish from Sand Castle (received 7lb) got him within a half a length at the post. Mens rea element prejudicial to military order il was an important consideration in others. Whether that was so could be determined only by the context of the particulars of the conduct alleged as set out in a charge under section 69 of the Army Act 1955.

The Courts Martial Appeal Court so stated when giving judgment allowing the appeal by Major Geofficy Hillyard Miller, Royal Artillery, who was convicted on May 21, 1982 by a general court martial (Assistant Judge Advocate General C. Grenville Gould) of two charges of signing a false document contrary to section 62(a) of the Army Act 1955, and two charges of conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, contrary to section 69.

He was acquitted by the court

He was acquitted by the court martial of other charges including two charges of theft.

The prosecution had alleged that the appellant, a gunnery instructor who was required to travel a great deal, had claimed for mileage allowances in his own car when in fact he deal, and the second or travel as the second o fact he had used an army vehicle, and for night subsistence allowances to which he was not entitled.

Mr Alastair Sharp for the appellant, Mr Michael Hucker for

LORD JUSTICE WATKINS, giving the judgment of the court, said that the only issue upon each of the charges under section 62(a) which the court had to resolve was whether each entry undoubtedly made on the claim forms was to the appellant's knowledge false in a material mentionless.

The verdicts on these charges were unsafe and unsatisfactory, inter alia, because the summing-up did not contain a sufficient direction on what was meant by "material particular". The court should have been directed to the effect that to be material a particular must be such as would be likely to play a part in influencing the decision to allow or disallow the claim.

The charges under section 69 were alternative to charges of theft of the moneys paid as allowances, of which the appellant was acquitted. Since all the ingredients of theft save that of dishonesty were admitted, the court must have acquitted the appellant of stealing the moneys because they were not satisfied that he had behaved dishonestly in he had behaved dishonestly in

Regina v Miller (Geoffrey)

Before Lord Justice Watkins, Mr
Justice Park and Sir John Thompson

Judgment delivered May 271

What, therefore, did he do wrong which could be said to offend against military law? It was alleged that although not delivered in making claims for allowances he While mens rea might not be an to the theft charges, guilty of conduct to the prejudice of good While mens rea might not be an element to be considered in all forms of conduct which could properly be said to be prejudicial to good order and military discipline, it was an important consideration in others. Whether that was so could be determined only by the context of the particulars of the conduct alleged as set out in a charge under section 69 of the Army Act 1955.

The Contis Martial Appeal Court

The court had been directed that an offence under section 69 was not one of strict liability. Their Lordships did not propose to attempt to create an all-embracing authority upon the subject of mer rez in the context of the offence.

They felt able to say, however, that while mens rea might not be an element to be considered in all forms of conduct which could properly be said to be prejudicial to good order and military discipline, it was an important consideration in others. Whether it was could only be determined by the context of the particulars of the conduct alleged as set out in a charge under section 69.

In the present case the particulars were stated in that form. An allegation of acting improperly being therein contained, the state of the appellant's mind at the relevant time was bound to be considered. The Assistant Judge Advocate General rightly directed the court that mens rea was an element in the offence, but further directions he had given could not have done other LORD JUSTICE WATKINS, than confuse the court. The ng the judgment of the court. convictions were unsafe and unsatisfactory.

An equally compelling reason for quashing the convictions was that really this was a situation in which the appellant was either guilty of acting dishonestly to obtain money conduct in presenting his claims was in no sense of the word improper of otherwise open to criticism.

Take away dishonesty, and consequently take away any knowledge that he was doing wrong, and the whole offence was taken away.

No one could suggest that in those circumstances it would be prejudicial to good order and discipline if an officer made an horset but. an officer made an honest but mistaken claim for allowances to which he was not entitled. Yet that

Their Lordships found it necess-ary to add that the addition to the charges of the alternatives under that section was inappropriate and defence under section 2(1)(a) of the Theft Act 1968 into the definition of dishonestly obtaining property by deception in section 15 of that Act, doing so would have added nothing to the direction given to the jury on a charge of attempting to obtain property by deception, and there was nothing unsafe or unsatisfactory about the conviction.

The Court of Appeal so stated when giving reserved reasons for dismissing an appeal by Jonathan Robert Woolven, aged 32, from Conviction at Birmingham Crown Court Under Part Court Court (Judge Ross QC and a jury) of attempting to obtain property by deception. He was sentenced to 12 nonths' imprisonment of which six months were to be held in suspense Mr Christopher Hotten, assigned by the Registrar of Criminal Appeals, for the appellant. Mr Nicholas J D Webb for the Crown. MR JUSTICE LEONARD said that the appellant, who had opened a bank account using a false name, knew that money would be transferred to it from an account belonging to a man called Roberts, a hotelier for whom the appellant had worked and who gave evidence for The appellant understood that Roberts could not withdraw the money in the ordinary way because if he did so the bank would claim it so as to reduce an overdraft. The appellant knew about a false letter purporting to establish his identity in order to induce the bank to part with £16,200.

Eventually he conceded that dinary people would, on his own ordinary people would, on his own version, have found his behaviour to be dishonest. He maintained that he had not thought it to be dishonest at the time.

The full offence of obtaining property by deception under section 15 was committed by "A person who, by any deception dishonestly obtains property belonging 15 was committed by "A person who, by any deception dishonestly obtains property belonging to another, with the intention of permanently depriving the other of it."

There was nothing unsafe or unsatisfactory about the conviction and the appeal was dismissed.

Even if it had been necessary to Even if it had been necessary to dishonest (a) if he appropriates the ead the effect of a "claim of right" operty in the belief that he has i law the right to deprive the other of it on behalf of himself or of a third

Mr Hotten submitted that the direction should have been to the effect that, if the jury concluded that in the belief that he had in law the right to deprive them of it on behalf of Roberts, whom he understood to be its owner, they should acquit.

While conceding that section 1(3) prevented the application of section 2(1)(a) to section 15, Mr Hotten asked the court to read its effect into

The question which arose for decision was whether the judge's direction as to the element of dishonesty was adequate to do justice in the present case.

The judge had directed the jury in accordance with R v Ghosh (The Times April 17, 1982; [1982] QB 1053) and stated, inter alia, "If having heard all the evidence in the having neard an the evidence in the case your final conclusion is that notwithstanding what he did he may not have regarded it as dishonest, that is an answer to this charge." Any direction based on the concept of claim of right as set out in section 2(1)(a), or otherwise.

would have added nothing to what the judge in fact said. Indeed, a direction based on Ghosh seemed likely to their Lordships to cover all occasions when a section 2 (1)(a) direction might otherwise have been desirable.

It was inevitable that the jur would disbelieve that the appellant had not thought his behaviour to be est at the time, even if then

Party HQ: your starter for No. 10?

There is one group of political full-timers whose careers will be maffected by the election results. Win or lose, the work of the political parties' administrators and researchers will go

Conservatives, Labour and the Alliance between them have about 1000 staff to provide the professional backbone for a largely amateur career. Work within the party organization has provided vital pre-Parliamentary experience for a number of Cabinet Ministers. On the Labour side, both Peter Shore and Denis Healey spent time heading sections of the headquarters research department, while the last Parliament included a small army of ex-Central Conservative

As a way into a political career, therefore, a job with the Party can be an excellent starter. But calculating carearists need to be circumspect about their allegiance. The Conservative Party employs most and has by far the greatest range of opportunities but it works in mysterious ways. Labour is more open, but more modest in scale. The Liberals and the Social Democrats, apart from admit-ting that their staff was tiny, none of their spokesmen had any idea who their full-timers were, or what they

The size of the Conservative Party agency network is justly famous for its impressive proportions. About two-

Marjorie Harris maps out a plan of attack in the fight for jobs

compared with a mere 70 constituencies which have Labour Party agents. For the eager whizz-kid, oiling the party machinery out in the sticks may not be the best way to political stardom. Instead it is London, and the intellectual hothouse of the research departments which probably provide the best environment for nuturing

The two main parties agree that the ideal candidate for a research job is university-educated, and aged under 30. But that is as far as their agreement goes.

Monica Foot based at Labour's unfashionable and politically remote based in Walworth Road said: "We normally get over 300 applicants for every vacancy and of those about 100 are good, suitable candidates. A lot of our people nowadays have done academic research. We also like to see active party membership, student union involvement and maybe experience as a local councillor or as a trades unionist".

Keenness, however, is not necess-arily a virtue where the Conservatives are concerned, although hard work and the ability to write well are essential. "I suppose our recruits tend to be Conservative supporters but it is not a particular requirement", I was party was almost taboo. But reality belies the apparant langour of the admission that "We've only ever advertised once. That was for an economist in The Economist. We only got three applicants and it was a complete disaster. In fact the Conservatives have a small team of talent spotters, including Lord Beloff, out scouring for promising offspring of the Eastablishment. Names of likely candidates mostly young men from the City, are discreetly passed on A few, like John Whittingdale, head of the political section, come straight from university. It is unashamedly the Old Boy net.

However valuable and interesting the work in the party headquarters may be it is usually only a stepping stone to other things. Aside from the truly committed apparatchiks who go on to the House of Commons or set jobs as special advisers to Secretaries of State most proceed into other kinds of research, often in the media. As both parties confessed, having such a nursery for future opinion-formers is very useful. "You know it can be valuable occasionally to phone up an ex-colleague on a newspaper and put him right about things — and of course it is terrific for them having built up such a lot of contacts." Whatever their offer differences, on the merits of political researchers the two parties

First give yourself a job

How hard finding a job will be depends on your abilities and the state of the economy but also on the spirit

As the election draws near Edward Fennel looks at in which you attempt to be successful. Whether you have experience or are looking for your first job, you still need to bring the same attack to the process and the same thought to analysing what is right for you. As well as what you would ideally like to do it is sensible to consider realistic alternatives where there may be better chances of being accepted.

If you are a school leaver, you have the benefit of up-to-date advice from your careers service. You should be informed about the new Youth Training Scheme for those who do not go on to full-time education. The need to register at a Jobcentre will have been explained. But because you are now part of the "system" you should not simply sit back. Do some independent thinking. You are the best person to help yourself. Use your initiative and tackle the job hunt as a real occupation: this will have the extra advantage of establishing the habit of work see your task as a challenge from which you can even extract some fun. Life may be serious but need not be miserable. A business like approach is the people who work the party machine essential. List sources of jobs: as well, as the careers officer, friends and relatives may have suggestions; look at small as well as large advertiments in the press and at cards in newsagents; commercial employment agencies are especially good for office work; factory noticeboards are anoyler source. Be ready to take any work, odd jobs, tempory or even voluntary work. No experience is ever wasted and you will be more attractive to potential employer if you can show what non gave done by your own efforts.

Having noted possible openings, submit applications. Pull out all the stops at once. It is useless writing one letter at a time, waiting for a reply, being turned down and starting again from scratch. Keep records. List vacancies, the dates you asked for details, when your application was sent in and a reply received. Draw up a curriculum vitae. This saves you time when filling in employers' forms.

One tip which will help you to send in a tidy application is to photocopy the firm's form, complete that copy and then transfer your details to the original.
The purpose of your letter, which must be tailored to each vacancy, is to achieve an interview. If you are offered one you have done well. Again, preparation will enable you to make the most of this opportunity. Find out all you can about the organization. Think up questions the interviewer may ask and decide how you would answer. You are likely to be asked if you have any yourself so jot some down beforehand. Your appearance and manner plus your qualidications will assist the interviewer to decide whether you are the person for the job so take care and above all arrive in good time.

If you have no luck, this is not necessarily your fault. Remember that you are competing with others. Keep np your morale by realizing that employers do not interview more candidates than they must and at least you were thought worth seeing.
Meantime, you have had some practice which you can turn to good account next time.

Robert Duvall is superb as General Essenhower in the threepart IKE (Channel 4 10.10pm) beginning tonight. The film, cleverly moding archive material with the acting, begins with the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor. Elsanhower, a one-star General is given a deak job by tive-star General Marshall (Dans Andrews) but quickly finds himself posted to London where he has an inauspicious first meeting with Kay Summersby, his driver, later to become his mistress. Lee Remick script, but as the film is based on ss Summersby's book we must take as accurate Miss Remick's portrayal of the divorces. With a clipped, very un-Lambeth like accent, Miss Summersby sweeps a bemused US Major Arnold off his feet at the same time making nerself indispensible to the General, Ian Richardson gives his usual bravura performance as Montgomery with Wensley Pithey 2 riveting film when there is some action but the few sentimental scenes are somewhat of an embarrassment.

First performed at the Royal Court ten years ago, Ted Whitehead's THE SEA ANCHOR (Radio 4 8.00pm) has been adapted for radio by the author and stars Jonathan Pryce and Michael Angelle as Les and Andy, two of a group of five friends who take a week-end's jaunt to Dublin from their native Liverpool. Four of them take the ferry while the fifth decides to sail across the Irlsh Sea in his dinghy. The four await the arrival of their intrepid friend on the jetty, drinking lots of strong liquour under a blazing sun. As night draws in the weather turns nasty as does the once lighthearted, boozy, banter and an air of aggression settles on the quartet. Mr Whitehead's clever, slightly menacing, script is powerfully acted by both Pryce and Angelis.

There is a welcome repeat this evening of Francis Watson's examination of the life and work of (Radio 3.7.00pm) and with a little help from, among others, Sir John Rothenstein and Gill's biographer, Malcolm Yorke, Watson brings to life the extraordinary stone carver,

David Steel: Soaring high towards polling day

Julian Haviland, Political Editor, talks to David Steel of the Liberals in the first of a series of interviews with the four party leaders

How much sleep do you get? Not enough, is the short answer. It varies - never more than six hours and usually nearer five. This to me is a great deprivation. I'm hopeless in the early morning and I find these early morning press conferences a tremendous strain. How do you get the newspapers

I don't - not first thing in the morning. Somebody else reads them for me - John Pardoe and Paul Tyler, who draw to my attention anything of significance. What milage are you doing? About 5,000 miles on the road as well as the air travel. Are you trying to cover the whole country or do you concentrate on of potential Alliance strength?

By a process of zig-zagging we have, in fact, covered the whole country, and I had a hunch the election was going to be on June 9 and the weekend before it was announced I shot off up to Orkney and Shetland, which I could not possibly have done during the campaign itself.

Is it important that your constituents should not think you take them for granted?

They don't think that, partly because I pride myself on being a very assiduous constituency MP between elections so they forgive my absences during elections, but my life has been made slightly easier because the size of my constituency had been reduced and there are fewer places to to visit. Has the fact that it is a joint campaign with the SDP reduced the load or added to the complications?

It has added to the complications; but one of the pleasant surprises of the campaign has been how few the complications are. I thought at the beginning that it was going to be a nightmare because every decision I took would have to be referred to the gang of four; but the ioint headquarters operation has worked like a dream, and there has been no strain or tension in the Alliance campaign at all. As a result I have been able to add more commitments to my daily programme, including more SDP

If, after polling day, the Liberal Party has a dozen or more MPs and the SDP only one or two - if the SDP fails, will you much care? You are talking as though this was last week. I don't really think this is a possibility. Had we stuck at the levels of support we were at the beginning of the campaign we would have to face that nightmare: but I think now that the level of support we are getting - and I must assume that it goes on rising towards polling day, is going to be sufficient to ensure that the SDP is there in appreciable numbers. Are you not just talking up support, because your potential voters need to be persuaded that you are on your way? But I have been quite accurate in my predicitions so far. I have said all the way through the campaign, do not expect any movement until half way through. That was right. The movement came half way through and it is now rising steeply. Where I was wrong is that I did not expect Labour support to collapse so quickly. Most of the SDP MPs have taken their political lives in their hands by forming their new party, whereas the Liberals are fighting most of the most winnable seats. Has there not been an inequality of risk between the two partners? It's very difficult to say. If we got the traditional Liberal result, the answer would be "yes" because the SDP would have great diffi-culty in having enough members to survive. But we are not now contemplating failure and if there is a more substantial swing from Labour than we anticipated at the start of the campaign, the SDP could be the main beneficiaries because they have taken on more of the seats where the Labour vote has to be diverted.

6 Growing doubts in the Tory camp about unemployment and the leadership style

If they were reduced to a rump would you expect them to join the Liberal Party?

We have no commitment on this whatever. We have always said this is an alliance for this election. We are going to work together in the next Parliament whatever happens. Precisely how depends on the outcome and we have three

We can either keep this Alliance as two separate parties working together or particularly if we could get electoral reform we shall be able to go our separate ways entirely as parties do on much of the Continent and fight against each other, but still be | First of all, the doubts about the prepared to work together in government's rightness in pursu-

Parliament, or we could go the other way - and the two parties will have to reflect on this in a mature way - and we could decide we ought to take the route towards

If David Owen emerges as the strongest figure in the SDP, could you see him wanting to come in under your leadership in a joint party? You would have to ask him that. How are you getting on with him? David has always had a slightly more prickly relationship with me than the other members of the gang of four. He is that sort of

He is also your sort of age, and a rival in that sense? Well, I don't think it stems from any rivalry. I don't think there is any antagonism between us on those grounds. We had a genuine difference of view about how the two parties should develop. I have always been quite open about it: I thought the two parties should move very closely together and campaign closely together, whereas he felt from the beginning that I was in danger of suffocating the SDP. Now that is a perfectly straight-forward view and he maintained it very firmly during the time that he was parliamentary leader of the SDP. The truth is that we get on extremely well together. What do you think will turn out to have been the decisive issues? On policy there are two issues

ing with vigour the policy of unemployment as a means to salvation. I think there are growing doubts inside the Conservative camp itself about the style and the nature of society that the present Tory leadership speaks to, and I think that is going to bring a lot of one-nation Conservative voters to us towards the end, especially now that the fear of the return of a Labour government is removed. The second issue is the one which brought the Alliance about - reshaping politics. We have been greatly assisted by the divisions in the Labour Party, not just over the issue of defence but the whole question of Militant Tendency candidates and the inadequate grasp which the leadership has of the turmoil inside the party. I think people feel it is just not an acceptable alternative government and therefore the chance is there for us to fill that void.

6 Healey and Hattersley both subscribed to a manifesto in which they didn't believe

Has there been a decisive moment? There have been mistakes in the campaign. The basic-mistake by the Labour Party was for people like Healey and Hattersley to have actually started a campaign subscribing to a manifesto in which they did not believe. The Hattersley approach was: "We are a democratic party and whatever rubbish is in the manifesto, I support it." That is not an intellectually honest position. Under cross-examination in the campaign it all unravelled.

Do you think the Prime Minister's character and personality have proved important? She provides positive leadership, but going round the country I am always mystified about the gap between the obvious high poll ratings she enjoys and the very strong dislike of her style of leadership among ordinary voters. I have always found she is a very strong leader, a very capable leader, and I disagree fundamentally with the direction in which she is trying to lead the country. I think she has no understanding of - and, more important - very little sympathy with how the other half

If she gets her landslide majority. what do you think will be the effect on the Tory party?

I should have thought it would be disastrous. Really some of the candidates they are putting up - I am not just talking about one or two with links with the National Front - I find there is a breed of new Conservative candidate which is frankly unpleasant. There is an abrasive quality, an uncaring quality, in the old terms a very right-wing quality about many of the Tory candidates. The generality of candidates are of the Right

the Conservative Party would be. Tomorrow: Michael Foot

Letter from Atlantic City

Casinos hit the jackpot but the rest go bust

Atlantic City was a poor, wretched dump of a town. Five years and billions of dollars later it is a rich, wretched dump of a town with some of America's most disgusting poverty alongside some of its most fabulous wealth.

Wherever the money is going it is not sweetening the stench of the slums and ghettos that spread haphazardly out for all who care to see just around the corner from the neon madness.

At weekends it is a crazed town, with hundreds of thousands of people from Philadelphia, New York, Boston and farther afield descending in countless numbers of coaches, aircraft and cars. Last week-end with the Frazier-Bugner fight (report, page 22) you could hardly move. There was not a vacant hotel room in

It all seems so incongruous. Outside the casino hotels there is nothing, absolutely nothing, save for the poor little houses, a couple of middle-class suburbs and several tedious miles of marshland.

Nowadays the city that not so long ago was the grand old lady of the East Coast, whose gentility and sophistication was attested by the smart young people who came to spend the season, is as much a gambling town as Las Vagas.

Nobody knows that more than the Las Vegas casino owners who year by year are watching their takings disappear into the ever-deepening pockets of the Atlantic City operators. The word is around, futhermore, that the Mafia has been moving money out of Las Vegas and into Atlantic City.

The famous Boardwalk exists no more in the old spirit. It is dominated by flashing casino hotels, nine glittering buildings whose impact has been fast, phenomenal and irreversible. They bring 23 million people a year to this miserable little place. They generate $1,500m (£1,000m) of revenue a year. They have sent rent and property prices through the

They are also the reason why there is serious talk of a $205m redevelopment plan to raze the ravaged wateland of the city's Inlet area – the worst of the slums - and build offices, shops and houses for rich and poor. Whether it will happen is a

Before the casinos came, matter of considerable doubt judging by the farce of what the city calls its grand plan - a blueprint drawn up several years ago on how the windfall of revenues from the casinos should be spent, for the betterment of the 47,000 permanent residents.

The people of the Inlet -mostly blacks and Hispanies are fearful and have put up a sign high on the wall of one of the slum buildings: "We live here. We are going to stay here in the South Inlet."

They are wrong. The land is owned by speculators and slums devalue the prices. Consequently there has been a steady 3,000 cases of arson a year for the past three years and the Hispanic population alone has plummeted from 5.000 to 1,500.

Nearly six years ago the New Jersey legislature legalized casino gambling in Atlantic City as "a unique tool of urban redevelopment". The casinos, it was argued, would turn the crumbling old town into a gem of the New Jersey shore.

The first casino opened and nothing has been the same since. At least 100 seaside stores have been driven out by the land-hungry casino operators and countless' operators and countless numbers of small-time merchants selling hot dogs and curios to the day-trippers have silently faded away.

The gambling emporiums are regulated by the Casino Control Commission, which decides everything from how the casinos can advertise themselves to the percentage the slot machines have to pay out. But at times the fivemember commission seems to be no match for the skill of the gambling entrepreneurs, and even now they are frantically redrafting a loophole that allowed the operators to escape a rule requiring them to reinvest a portion of revenues into city redevelopment.

Atlantic City has received phenomenal sums of money from city taxes, much of which has financed a huge reduction in property rates. The folks in the Inlet have not benefited, however, they have to pay anything up to $450 a month rent for their squalid houses.

The dream of rebuilding Atlantic City has proved clusive, and only time will tell if the greatest gamble of its history will pay off. Christopher Thomas

National Day

Swedes celebrates its national flag day today. It commemorates the day in 1809 when a new constitution was introduced, separating the powers of the king and the Riksdag (parliament). King Gustav IV Adolf was deposed, following the defeat of Sweden by the Russians, and a new king was sought. The following year the French Marshal Jean Baptiste Bernadotte was chosen as successor to the throne. The 1809 constitution lasted until 1974 and the successors of Bernadotte still sit on the Swedish throne.
